GERMANS IN FULL RETREAT

PARIS, July 27.—The Germans today retreated along the whole front north of the Marne, the war office announces tonight. French and allied troops, pressing hard on the enemy rear guards, have reached the line of Bruyeres-Villeneuve-sur-Fere, Courmont, Passy-Grigny, Cuisles, La Neuville and Chaumuzy. The allies have advanced more than fifteen kilometers (about ten miles) northeast of Chateau Thierry. The right bank of the Marne has been widely cleared of the enemy.

(The capture of Le Charmel by the Americans and the French advance north of Port-a-Binson made the German line five to eight miles long on the north bank of the Marne between Dormans and Chatillon untenable. The German lines were evidently withdrawn to the north along the entire arc of the front between Fere-en-Tardenois and Ville-en-Tardenois on a front of about nineteen miles.)

MORE LETTERS SHOW CENSUS AID TO POLITICS

City Hall Machine's Use of Schools Established.

BY RALPH ELLIS.

New revelations showing how the Chicago public school system was turned into a Thompson-Lundin political vote getting machine during the taking of the 1916 school census were made to THE TRIBUNE yesterday. The later evidence is cumulative to that published in yesterday's issue.

Citizens who read the letters of politicians who conducted the 1916 primary for the Thompson faction were no longer left in any doubt as to the intentions of the mayor's lieutenants in the taking of the proposed 1918 census at an expenditure of $60,000 of the people's money. The $60,000 is ripe for the picking, while Mayor Thompson is traveling about the state discussing profiteers. He was not accessible yesterday to be asked whether he regarded the proposed use of this $60,000 as profiteering.

Same Set of Boys Control.

The same men who were manipulating the school machinery as a political instrument in 1916 are in control of the city hall political forces today. Nearly every man whose name appears in the political correspondence of the 1916 census period as an effective census job getter is today either himself a candidate for office at the September primaries on the Thompson slate or is a backer of these slate selections.

The later disclosures show that the civil service laws were ignored in the handling of the enumeration work in 1916, but that a stiff political merit test was practiced with Leslie P. ("Ike") Volz, the mouthpiece of "Boss" Lundin, as sole chief "examiner."

It is a notable fact that the name of neither Mayor Thompson nor Mr. Lundin appears in any of the census job correspondence, but it is also evident that no person not in sympathy with the political aspirations of the pair was allowed to stay long on the census pay roll.

Frequent communications passing between Mr. Volz, W. L. Bodine, the titular but powerless head of the census taking agencies, and many Thompson job holders and politicians, show on their face that political organization "regularity" was the prime requisite for a successful applicant for a place on the census pay roll.

Coffin's Aid Referred To.

In one letter Capt. Percy Coffin, then president of the city civil service commission, and now the Thompson candidate for county treasurer, is mentioned specifically. Andrew McAnash, the powerful Thompson leader in the Twenty-fifth ward, wrote this letter to Mr. Bodine asking him to "strain a point" and place a family friend upon the truant officers' sixty day list and added:

"I will see Capt. Coffin and see if he cannot get her on the list."

Miss Margaret McCormick, the applicant, instead was given a job in the census work.

In another letter Mr. McAnash calls upon Mr. Bodine to place another applicant of his acquaintance and recites the man's qualifications in these words:

"The bearer, Mr. A. E. Anderson, whom I overlooked and forgot to get him taking the census. Is there any possible way you can work him in? If so, the same would be highly appreciated as he is one of our workers up there (Twenty-fifth ward) and justly entitled to it."

Tells the Whole Story.

This missive tells the whole story as disclosed by the documentary evidence of the census taking. The man that delivered his precinct or "stood in" with the ward bosses got the jobs. The applicant without political pull was left at the post as far as employment in census work was concerned.

In several instances it was discovered that Democrats had been slipped in as workers and complaint followed as soon as the fact became known. It

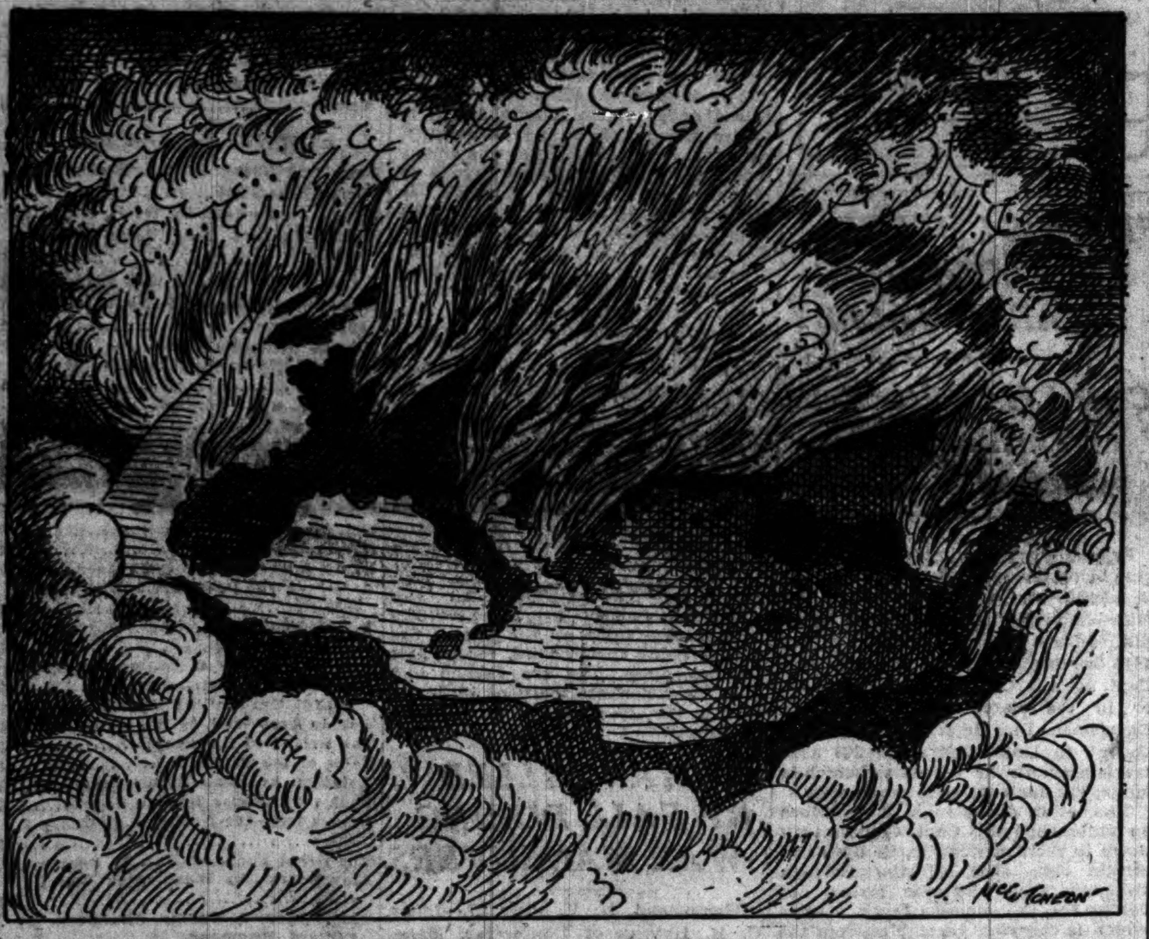
AUSTRIA DECLARES WAR ON SERBIA

FOUR YEARS AGO TODAY THEY—



SET THE WORLD ON FIRE.

QUICK WATSON! FETCH ME THE ENCYCLOPEDIA!!

History will record that the great mystery of Chicago and lake shore suburbs was solved Saturday, July 27, 1918, A. D. For many days the fishy tang that has been wafted inland from the waters of Lake Michigan has defied identification. Rumors of German spies casting odoriferous chemicals in the lake and even of a new seagoing skunk were rife. And then George W. Paullin, sanitary district trustee, called upon Langdon Pearse, official engineer of the district and bacteriologist, to conduct an investigation.

Mr. Pearse took the scent most diligently and as a result the solution of the mystery was announced last night as follows in a report submitted by him to Mr. Paullin. Here it is:

"The odor commonly described as fishy may be produced by asterionella, which belongs to the diatomaceae. This is a very beautiful, star-shaped organism and very common in Lake Michigan. When present in small quantities the odor is described as aromatic, but in large amounts may be fishy. Other organisms making fishy odors belong to the protogoa family. The chlorophyceae are algae and also have a fishy odor."

Yankee Prisoners Cheer Allied Airplane Raiders

GENEVA, July 27.—[By the Associated Press.]—The majority of the Americans taken prisoner by the Germans are quartered in the Rhine cities of Darmstadt, Karlsruhe, and Giessen, according to advices reaching the American branch of the international Red Cross here. Allied airmen who bomb these cities are cheered by the Americans, the advices state.

Greek King Escapes Death from Foe Airman's Bomb

ATHENS, Monday, July 22.—King Alexander of Greece had a narrow escape yesterday from death. The train on which he was returning from the Serbian front was bombed by an enemy aviator at the Florina station. The bomb just missed the engine. Nobody was hurt.

One Day in Hammond; A Few Bits of News

Hammond, Ind., July 27.—[Special.]—Mrs. Mary Jenseh, aged 58, of Hegewisch, went out into her yard to rescue baby chickens caught in the storm. She was killed by lightning.

Peter Lakotas, a well to do Whiting Hungarian, hanged himself because his wife had sued for divorce.

POLICE RENEW FIGHT ON VICE; RAIDS STARTED

Raids similar to those of last Sunday morning when several hundred men and women were seized in various South Side "dry" cabarets, were made late last night but this time shady hotels and resorts were the chief objective.

"Dry" cabarets, however, it was said, will not be neglected by the raiders in the efforts to suppress vice and violations of the law through the sale of intoxicants in soft drink parlors.

Near midnight last night forty detective sergeants picked from all parts of the city and said to be familiar with vice conditions in their respective districts were waiting in the office of Acting Morals Inspector Hugh McCarthy. When he appeared a few minutes later he gave each group, composed of about five men, their instructions and sent them away.

HUNS HAMMER HAIG LINES AS BATTLE WIDENS

Attack by Bavarian Prince on British Seems Near.

(By Cable to The Chicago Tribune.)

LONDON, July 27.—German artillery, which was loosed last night with great force upon British lines in the angle between the Somme and the Aisne and north to the La Bassee canal sector, continued today to attack Field Marshal Haig's troops.

The hostile bombardment was particularly heavy on the northern portion of the British front late today, Field Marshal Haig reported.

British artillery replied vigorously, especially in La Bassee canal sector. Haig's raiders also penetrated the German lines near Sailly-Laurette, Neuville-Vitasse, Arleux-en-Gobelle, and Lens. The British obtained prisoners—one of the field marshal's best sources of information.

Berlin Also Reports It.

The Berlin war office statement also pointed to the great increase in the fighting activities on the Flanders front.

Strategists here saw in these sudden developments the opening phase of Germany's greatest drive for a decision—an attempt to realize its hope of gaining peace before the United States can plunge its millions into a great offensive.

On all sides belief was expressed that the greatest crisis of the war is at hand—that the battle is about to spread clear to the northern end of the British front and the sea.

Expect Drive by Rupprecht.

With the crown prince's army fighting for its life in the Marne bag, where Foch's French, American, Italian, and British troops are constantly pounding them on three sides, Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria is believed ready to launch a new offensive against the British. Field Marshal Haig's men are ready to meet it.

RUMORS OF NEW OFFENSIVE

BY EDWIN L. JAMES.
Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, July 27, 9 a. m.—One hears much talk now of a new German offensive. Many of these reports come from German sources.

One must admit that, despite the losses inflicted on the Germans in checking their drive of July 15 and by the allied counter drive, the kaiser at this time is able to launch another effort. It would be in accord with German plans as adopted last March. Furthermore, it would detract the attention of the German people from the reverses the crown prince has suffered, and even a momentary success might well bolster up the unhealthy German morale.

From German sources come again reports of an attack to be made against the English front. It is known that in the last three days reserves of Prince Rupprecht's armies have been concentrating between Amiens and Ypres. Reports from the British front today told of heavy bombardments along the whole line.

Promised to Keep Up Drive.

In reckoning on a German attack against the British one must recall that the Germans tried Champagne and failed, tried between Reims and Soissons and failed, tried between Soissons and Montdidier and failed. The high command has promised the German people to keep on driving.

"Liberty Building" New Name for German Edifice

Added to the Liberty bell, bonds, loaves, chips, and so on, now comes the Liberty building. And what do you think it is? Why, none other than the old familiar German building out in Jackson park. The employés of the park christened it about a month ago unceremoniously, and since then it has fallen into general use, even among the park commissioners, although the name has never been officially changed.

LARGE FORCE OF YANKEE TROOPS ON ITALY FRONT

Arrival of U. S. Units Is Greeted with Enthusiasm.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE ITALIAN FRONT, July 27.—[By the Associated Press.]—American fighting troops are now on the Italian front. They began arriving this morning. They are being billeted with the Italians.

Heretofore the only combatant American troops were aviators, and the appearance of this large body of fighting men from the United States at the present moment has occasioned the greatest satisfaction.

Italians Rejoice and Wonder.

Maj. Gen. Eben Swift of the American military mission to Italy, was the first to greet the newly arrived Americans. He had already made arrangements for their comfort. The Italians greeted them with enthusiasm and rejoiced at the splendid physical condition which the American soldiers showed.

The Italians appeared greatly astonished when the overseas men immediately sought out a bathing place and then started several games of baseball.

Italians Block Foe's Attacks.

ROME, July 27.—The official report issued by the war office tonight said:

"Enemy detachments attempted local attacks at several points on the mountain front. This morning a party succeeded in penetrating one of our trenches on Monte Corno, but was immediately driven out.

"At Mount Kaberlaba British patrols hindered the enemy from approaching and forced him to retire. On Asolone the enemy counter attacked on the flanks and withdrew, leaving prisoners."

STILL THINK FOE MAY MAKE STAND NORTH OF MARNE

Washington, D. C., July 27.—Harassed on the flanks by allied infantry and with advanced positions directly north of the Marne swept by allied artillery, the German army in the Soissons-Reims salient has retreated to a new line of resistance, where another attempt will be made to meet the attack of the French, American, British, and Italian troops.

Thus was the German withdrawal, reported in advices from Paris, viewed by military officials here tonight. Press dispatches telling of the enemy's retreat were read by Gen. March, chief of staff, with great interest.

The retirement of the enemy did not alter the widespread belief in official circles that the enemy still contemplates fighting it out in the region north of the Marne. Officials were not prepared to venture an opinion as to the location of this line. Severe rear guard actions, it was assumed, had been carried on by the enemy to cover the concentration along this line and the hasty throwing up of field entrenchments.

Military wisdom, it was pointed out, dictated complete withdrawal from the salient between Soissons and Reims. The internal situation in Germany and Austria, it was suggested, may have forced the German general staff to make only a partial retirement and to accept again the challenge of battle.

ALLIES FRIENDS OF FOE MASSES, HARDEN SAYS

AMSTERDAM, July 27.—Maximilian Harden devotes practically the whole of today's Die Zukunft to proving that Chancellor von Hertling's charge against the allies that they want to annihilate Germany is untrue.

Harden quotes President Wilson's Mount Vernon speech and A. G. Balfour's last house of commons speech to show how bitter the entente nations are against militarism, but that they are ready to give the German people a fair chance.

He compares these speeches with those recently delivered either by the German chancellor or various junkers in the Prussian upper house, where the demand for unlimited annexations is continually heard.

He concludes by saying: "Germany must begin to see clearly on which side is the will to annexations. Germany must begin to fight against this power in its midst—a power with which Germany herself long ago became disgusted."

ARMY OF CROWN PRINCE FLEES FROM MARNE TRAP

American Capture of Le Charmel and French Advance Force Enemy Back to Ourcq River; Allies Pound Both Flanks.

BULLETIN.
BY WALTER DURANTY.
Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, July 27, 8 p. m.—The Germans are retreating in the Marne salient. According to latest news the rearward movement began late this morning and was rapidly accentuated in the southern portion of the pocket. The allies have already gained several kilometers. It is a frank admission of defeat. The second battle of the Marne may pass into history as the beginning of Germany's downfall.

BULLETIN.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE AISNE-MARNE FRONT, July 27.—[By the Associated Press.]—The French and Americans have continued their rapid advance to the northeast and the forest of Fere was cleared of the enemy this afternoon. The allied forces are losing contact with the Germans.

PARIS, July 27.—The French war office statement telling of the retreat of the crown prince's army follows:

"Under the continued pressure of the French and allied troops for several days past the Germans retreated today along the whole front north of the Marne. Our troops, pursuing closely the enemy rear guards, have reached the general line of Bruyeres, Villeneuve-sur-Fere, Courmont, Passy-Grigny, Cuisles, La Neuville aux Larris, Chaumuzy.

"The right bank of the Marne has been widely cleared. We have continued our advance for more than fifteen kilometers northeast of Chateau Thierry.

Forced by U. S. Victory.

LONDON, July 27.—The retreat of the crown prince's army was, no doubt, forced by the capture of Le Charmel by the Americans and the French advance north of Port-a-Bruson. These gains made the German pocket along the Marne, between Dormans and Chatillon, untenable.

The German lines were withdrawn to the north along a wide arc swinging before Fere-en-Tardenois on the west and Ville-en-Tardenois on the east for a distance of approximately twenty miles.

New Line on the Ourcq.

It is believed the new front which the crown prince's generals hope to establish will follow the north bank of the Ourcq river from east of Oulchy-le-Chauteau through Fere-en-Tardonies, thence bulging to the southeast to the region of Goussancourt, and thence to the east to Ville-en-Tardenois, the branches of the Ardre river, and the positions before Mery Premecy.

The British advance southwest of Reims, however, already threatens the left flank of this new line and may force a further retirement north of Ville-en-Tardenois.

The latest reports show the Germans have been drawn back from Chateau Thierry a distance of fifteen kilometers (about ten miles), the new advance of the Americans through Le Charmel showing a gain of more than four miles in the last twenty-four hours. This advance is directly astride the main highway to Fismes and the Vesle river.

Yankees Win Le Charmel.

Washington D. C., July 27.—Capture of Le Charmel by American forces Thursday was reported today by Gen. Pershing.

Le Charmel was the scene of most bitter fighting, and according to yesterday's dispatches from the front changed hands several times before the Americans finally drove the Germans beyond the town.

Identify 52 Foe Divisions.

A total of fifty-two German divisions have been identified in the Aisne-Marne fighting, said an official dispatch today from France. This represents approximately one-quarter of the total number of German troops on the western front, the dispatch said, and shows the tremendous concentration the enemy has been forced to muster to meet Gen. Foch's counter attack.

The dispatch also said that the French captured fifty officers, 1,800 men, four cannon, forty trench mortars, and 300 machine guns in the recent local operation north of Montdidier in the Picardy sector. A press dispatch from Paris estimated the total number of prisoners captured so far in the counter offensive as 30,000.

Pound German Flanks.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE AISNE-MARNE FRONT, July 27.—(By the Associated Press.)—The progress made by Franco-American troops on the Aisne-Marne front is considered eminently satisfactory by the commanders, and the failure of the Germans to employ artillery extensively has tended to confirm the belief that their heavy guns on the greater part of the field have been moved far back, perhaps to a position which may mark a new line.

While steady pressure is being maintained on the arc forming the bottom of the sack, the allies are determinedly hammering the flanks where Von Boehn and Von Eben have concentrated their armies, returning blow for blow in the hope that they can hold out until the main body of the Germans can be withdrawn with a minimum loss.

Rain Spoils Air Work.

Aerial operations were again of less importance today on account of the weather. It was cloudy all day and there were numerous showers, making it impracticable to keep up the observation balloons which usually mark both lines. Occasionally both the allies and the enemy attempted to use planes, but these in most cases were forced to descend on account of the rain.

There is a growing belief that the enemy will make no effort to stand on the Ardre river. Fere-en-Tardenois and even Ville-en-Tardenois, directly east, are already under heavy fire from the flanks and the south line, making the roads, as well as the temporary railroads, virtually useless for transport purposes. Those positions must be almost untenable.

The Germans are doing their utmost to hold the high ground southeast of Soissons for a continuation of their line either along the Ardre or further north along the Vesle.

50 Mile Fighting Line.

The flanks of the French, British, and other armies are withstanding every effort of the Germans, who appear to be making a most determined effort south of Soissons. The line remains much the same as it has been for the last two or three days, the only changes being slight advances. The battle line now totals approximately fifty miles, although there is not actual fighting along every mile of it, and is a more broken one, made so by the character of the enemy's withdrawal, especially on the south side.

The effect has been the presentation of a highly dangerous, spongy front, into which any part of the advancing allied line might fall. Were it not for the hunting down of the enemy and cleaning out of points of observation, some parts of the line would be far in advance of where they are.

Germans Use Peculiar Defense.

The Germans have left officers who know how to maneuver skillfully partially deserted units so that at times it appears almost ironical to refer to their defense as a rear guard action. It is just that, however, although by any standard except those established in this war, the almost half daily and really minor encounters would be styled big battles.

Prisoners brought to one of the American division headquarters today were men of the landwehr, who confirmed former statements of prisoners that the armies engaged in the retirement are leaving only enough men to resist efforts to hurry them. Like other prisoners, they professed weariness of the war, and said this feeling was general, but supposed they must go on, since the men in high command so willed.

YANKS TAKE TWO VILLAGES

BY EDWIN L. JAMES.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, July 27, 7 p. m.—Before the constant pressure of American troops the Germans are now falling back toward the Ourcq river on a line reaching from south of Fere-en-Tardenois to the northern top of the Forest De Riz in front of Le Charmel. American forces made an advance on this front today, capturing two villages and reaching a point within (deleted) miles of the Ourcq.

Captured Germans say they have orders to take up new positions on the northern bank of the Ourcq. Our artillery destroyed many bridges across the stream, which is about twenty feet wide and two to three feet deep. German soldiers are wading across the river.

Enemy Concentrates Troops.

Observers report a concentration of German forces on the plateau Tardenois, and there are evidences of German activity in the forest of De Riz north of the Marne, which might presage a counter attack there.

Captured officers tell of great difficulties the Germans are having supplying troops in the salient south of the Aisne. All railroads available to them are as good as lost. The highways are being constantly shelled by American, French, and English artillery.

The Germans cannot make use of the railroads centering in the Reims district. At Soissons for more than a week the allied artillery has been controlling the railroad yards there. About ten kilometers east of Soissons the Germans have the rail head connecting with the narrow gauge line they have built. This, too, is being shelled.

Dormans Road Under Fire.

The main highway from Soissons to Chateau-Thierry is mostly held by French and Americans, and so is of no value to the Germans. The highway from Dormans to Reims via Ville-en-Tardenois is under shell fire. Practically all other important roads in the salient converge at Fere-en-Tardenois and the cutting of these communications would follow the capture of that town.

Find Supergun Bases.

In the Bois de Chatelet, southwest of Brecy, taken by Franco-American troops, were discovered yesterday emplacements for the supercannon which it is believed was firing on the Paris district. The Germans succeeded in getting the big gun away, but evidences are being carefully studied by French artillery experts to learn secrets of the German pride.

The shell is 380 millimeters, or 15.2 inches diameter, and weighs some 1,600 pounds. This type of gun was used to shell the Meaux district July 15, the day the Germans started the last drive. The distance from the supergun location to the French capital is eighty kilometers.

Sacrifice Machine Gunners.

The German rear guard defense in the last five days has been carried on by a system of sacrificing machine gunners, who are left in nests while the main body of troops, unknown to them, withdraw. These gunners are being picked up by ones, twos, and threes—sometimes a considerable distance behind the American lines.

Sergt. Lynch was sent by his captain yesterday to carry a message to another unit. His path lay through woods. He arrived at his destination with seven Boches. He had captured six in a bunch and one further along.

LAUDS YANKEE DIVISION

BY LOWELL MELLETT.

(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, July 27.—In the French review of the counter attacks between Soissons and Chateau Thierry high praise is bestowed upon the American division forming the pivot of Gen. de Goutte's army.

"Composed chiefly of Yankees recruited in Boston and other parts of Massachusetts, they succeeded in this sector the division which participated in the operations in Belleau wood and Bouresches, and only asked an opportunity to prove the same gallantry," the review said.

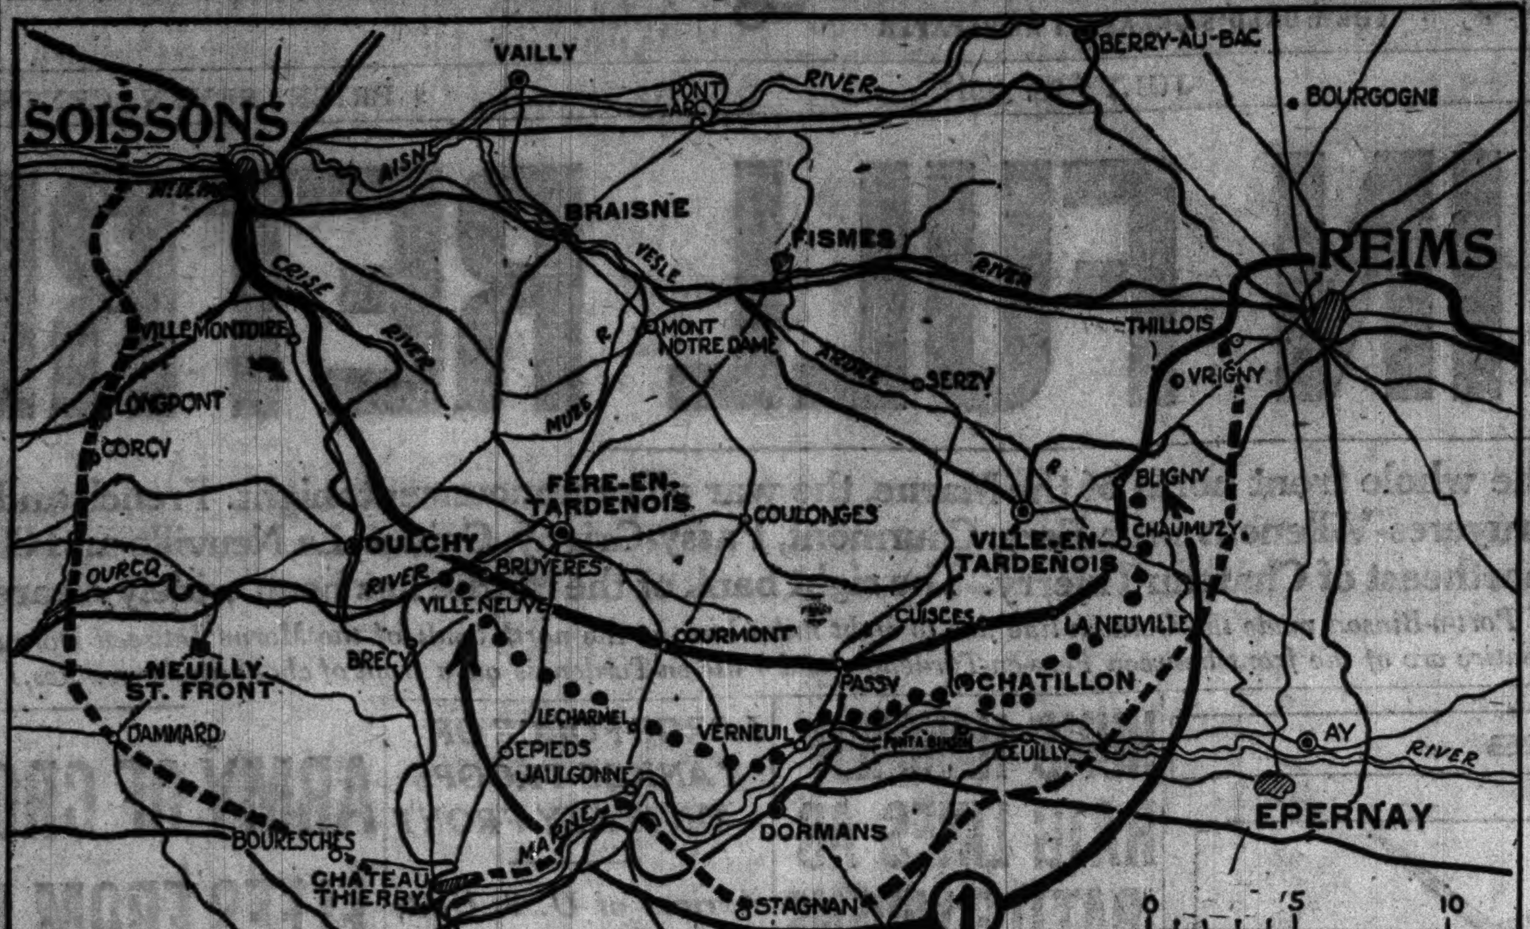
"But when acting as a pivot it is necessary to regulate one's pace to the flanks. In an especially commendatory manner the Yankees followed orders.

Fight Six Days, Gain Ten Miles.

"In six days they realized at certain points a gain of seventeen kilometers (ten and a half miles), fighting without respite day and night and proving the most splendid military qualities. In all liaison services they functioned perfectly. Their discipline caused the Germans surprise and unwilling admiration.

"They marched with their officers ahead, like French units. Enemy prisoners cannot get over this, saying: 'We do not see enough of our officers; it is your good fortune, like the French, who have always their officers ahead.'"

FRANCO-AMERICAN FORCES ADVANCE IN SOISSONS-REIMS SECTOR



1—Paris reports big retreat of Germans north of the Marne on the entire line before Fere-en-Tardenois and Ville-en-Tardenois, a front of more than twenty miles.

B—Action on the Amiens sector is increasing, and both sides are engaged in violent artillery fighting along the Somme and Ancre rivers, in the neighborhood of Lens, and extending into Flanders.

C—In the Champagne the French carried out a local operation south of Mount Sans Nom and advanced their lines two-thirds of a mile on a front of two miles.

D—The Marne sector, where the Franco-American forces have driven the Germans ten miles northeast of Chateau Thierry.

BATTLE STATEMENTS

AMERICAN REPORT.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—The war department has received the following report, dated July 26, on operations of the United States army in France:

Yesterday between the Ourcq and the Marne our troops captured Le Charmel.

Section B—Further reports have been received of the fighting which took place from July 21 to 23 in the region northeast of Chateau Thierry. American troops played an important part in the struggle, which ended in our lines being advanced to a point about five miles from the town.

The enemy fought rear guard actions with great stubbornness, defending the ground foot by foot and using large numbers of machine guns. His resistance retarded but could not stop our advance and on the 22d we captured Epieds and Trugny.

The next day the struggle became more bitter. The Germans counter attacked with violence. Epieds changed hands four times and remained German; Trugny changed hands three times and remained ours.

One of our divisions, up to the evening of July 23, had captured three cannon, one trench mortar, fifteen machine guns, and large quantities of ammunition and other material.

On the 24th our troops returned to the attack with vigor and drove the enemy out of Epieds and back into the forest de Fere, four miles beyond.

FRENCH REPORT.

On the right bank of the Marne French troops have advanced their lines north of Port-a-Binson.

On the Champagne front the French carried out a local operation in the region south of the "mountain without a name" and advanced one kilometer over a front of three kilometers. Two hundred prisoners, of whom seven were officers, have fallen into the hands of the French.

GERMAN REPORT

Berlin, via London, July 27.—The German war office issued today the following statement:

Army group of Crown Prince Rupprecht: In the evening fighting activity was greatly revived. It increased during the night, especially on both sides of the river Scarpe, in connection with the unsuccessful attacks of British infantry.

Army group of the German crown prince: On the battle front between Soissons and Reims there was a further marked decrease yesterday in the fighting activity.

In the Champagne partial attacks launched by the French on both sides of Perthes (four miles east of Souain) were repulsed.

There have been successful reconnoitering thrusts in the Vosges and in the Sundgau.

The evening report says:

This also has been a quiet day on the battle front.

BRITISH REPORT

LONDON, July 27.—The British war office report on army operations in France follows:

During the night our raiding parties entered the enemy's lines in the neighborhood of Sailly-Laurette, Neuville-Vitasse, Arleux-en-Gohelle, and Lens and brought back several prisoners.

The hostile artillery was active last night between the Somme and the Ancre rivers, and there was some activity on the part of both artilleries in the La Bassee canal sector.

Field Marshal Haig's report from British headquarters in France says tonight:

HAM-AND TRAIL LEADS DICKS TO ARMY DESERTER

Lane, who is 36 years old, enlisted in January, 1916. He was assigned to recruiting at St. Louis. All went well with him, he says, as he was "chock-full" of patriotism, until a superior began to evidence signs of jealousy. Lane was a private. In his language, he "beat it."

Since that time government officials have traced him to fifteen different rooming houses. Yesterday Detective Sergeants Stapleton and Carroll of the detective bureau, using as their clew Lane's fondness for the army fare, made inquiry among the north side restaurants, and learned a man answering their description "hameggedandbeaned" at 676 North Clark street. Lane admitted his identity and will be sent to Jefferson barracks.

'Cable Wilson,' Yankee Prisoners Tell Germans

GENEVA, July 27.—"Ask Pershing." "Cable Wilson." These are some of the answers given by American prisoners to German officers who question them on naval and military matters. The German officers are furious at the American prisoners for their refusal to divulge any information whatever, and the coldly sarcastic manner in which the men almost invariably reply to those seeking information.

Kaiser Denies Hearing to Man Who Was Caught

LONDON, July 27.—Emperor William has refused to receive Count Luxburg, so that the former German minister to Argentina might justify himself, says an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Amsterdam.

The count handed in his report on his mission to Argentina to the foreign office on Thursday. After the emperor had refused to see him he conferred with Admiral von Hintze, the foreign secretary.

Count Luxburg, it is added, has withdrawn from the diplomatic service.

111 New Cholera Cases Reported in Petrograd

LONDON, July 27.—In the past twenty-four hours 111 cases and 38 suspected cases of Asiatic cholera have been officially reported in Petrograd, says a Russian government wireless dispatch.

FRANCE CHEERS U.S. FLOOD INTO MARNE VALLEY

France—that part in the battle zones now being flooded with American boys in khaki, who are busy chasing the Hun—is vividly described in a letter just received by Mrs. John M. Coulter, 5648 Dorchester avenue, from her son, Capt. John G. Coulter, former instructor in the state normal school at Charleston, Ill. He is now "boss gardener" in Uncle Sam's big 200 acre truck garden near Versailles, which is supplying our boys with green stuff.

The letter, dated June 26, describes an automobile trip Capt. Coulter took down to the American battle lines and within rifle shot of the German trenches, when he was laying out routes for the express truck service which is carrying vegetables from the farm to the soldiers' mess shacks. It tells of the heavy movement of American boys then under way to the front lines, which is now resulting in the retreat of the Germans.

Series of Pictures.

The letter reads in part as follows:

"How I wish I could make you see the series of wonderful pictures that unrolled before my eyes yesterday. It has been a perfect June for weather and yesterday was one of those brilliant days that come straight from the ocean, high tumbling clouds, carried careening across, a sun that dazzles you one minute and hides its face the next. You can almost see the white caps and smell the salt. It was in the morning glory of a day like that that Lieut. Prescott and I left on the long paved road for ———. Paris was not ten miles behind us, before we were in the midst of military movement.

"It was not like that when I went out with my ambulance more than a year ago. Then, of course, the Germans were a good deal farther away and there were long miles of nearly deserted country road. But now they have come nearer and the Americans have gone out to meet them. And today and every day for weeks the Americans are pouring out to meet them, and, ye Gods, how it thrilled you to see them. Yesterday was Sunday and the whole countryside lined the roads to see the Americans go by. For miles and miles we ran past great trucks with twenty soldiers to each truck and every truck and nearly every soldier carried roses—the horses had roses in their bridles and the men had bunches of red poppies in the muzzles of their guns.

Throw Kisses and Roses.

They sang and French girls ran out and threw kisses and roses at them. There somehow was the whole strength of a people poured out—blithely, gayly, lavishly. It was the splendid parade of a nation that has found itself and goes almost gladly and most eagerly to share in the sacrifice. Finer boys than the young officers who marshaled these men never lived, I tell you—and the men! Well, this was a new division—mostly from Pennsylvania.

"I've seen a lot of soldiers over here, and I saw the marines swing into action that time that hardly half came back, but not one thing has thrilled me more than that long parade of boys just come over from America, the smell of the sea still on them—moving gladly to the guns. At last we ran past them (as I write refugees are streaming past my window, women trudging with carts) and came to a big French town swarming with Americans, every one bustling and very keen about the job."

30 BOLD MARINES ARE HONORED IN BATTLE FOREST

Held Assaulted Posts and Inflicted Heavy Losses on the Foe.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—[Special.]—How thirty marines received the croix de guerre last May for gallant conduct, courage, and coolness in action against the enemy during the occupation of a sector by the marine brigade is described in a communication from France made public today at marine corps headquarters.

Of the total number cited for the decoration, only eleven were present. Three were killed in action, sixteen were wounded and in the hospital. The crosses for those wounded were presented to them in the field hospital.

The ceremonies took place within sound and range of the German guns, hidden by the sheltering trees of a dense forest, and in a heavy morning mist and drizzling rain.

Rest in Anonymity.

Censorship regulations prohibit mentioning the names of the officers—a major, first lieutenant, and three second lieutenants. The major received the decoration "for having impressed a most wonderful military spirit upon the men of his command. By the judicious disposition of his troops he made it possible for a fraction of his company, violently attacked at night by a strong assaulting detachment, to resist victoriously and to inflict serious losses on the enemy."

The four lieutenants received the cross for "conducting their units with indomitable courage and coolness in a hand to hand fight against an enemy superior in number and repulsing him with heavy losses."

Among Enlisted Men.

Among the enlisted men, in addition to the three killed in action, were Frank H. Hullinger, 5921 South Winchester avenue, Chicago, and Earl Sleeth of Grenola, Kas., who "volunteered under violent bombardment to insure liaison of its advanced post, which was attacked by a strong enemy detachment"; Sergt. Louis Cukela of Minneapolis, Corporal Clarence H. Babb, 332 West Fifty-fifth street, Chicago; Walter Klamm, Hammond, Ind.; Raymond J. Ross, Homer, Mich., and Joseph C. Malony, Jackson, Mich., who, although wounded in a night attack, "courageously remained at their combat post, continuing to fire and displaying heroic courage."

The French general who conferred the decorations eloquently praised the achievements of the marines in a short speech, in which he summarized their deeds of bravery, remarking on the discipline and efficiency of the brigade, and congratulating its commanding officer. He then pinned the little bronze emblems on the men and shook each by the hand with a personal word of congratulation.

Review of Troops.

The ceremonies over, the officers took their position on the side of the road winding through the forest, and the companies, first the French and then the American, marched by in review to the lively tune of the "March Lorraine."

Cadet Killed in Texas.

Fort Worth, Tex., July 27.—Flying Cadet Fred C. Campbell Jr., whose home is Rosedale, Kas., was killed here this morning when his plane dropped into a tail spin at a low altitude. He was 26 years old. His father lives at Browning, Mont.

Nose Dive Kills Instructor.

Waco, Tex., July 27.—Lieut. H. C. Winter, 22 years old, stationed at Rich flying field, was killed today six miles south of Waco when his airplane fell while he was instructing W. K. Abernathy, a cadet. Abernathy was not seriously injured.

U-Boat Dives from Under Survivors of Vessel

TWO NEW U. S. CORPS, MAKING FIVE IN FRANCE

Total Army 1,350,000 Sent Over There, March Says.

OUR FORCES IN EUROPE

An American division consists of 27,000 combatant troops with 18,000 added of supply troops.

A corps consists of six divisions.

Five corps—the number now organized under Gen. Pershing in Europe—include 810,000 United States fighting men and 540,000 supply troops.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., July 27.—[Special.]—The forming of two more army corps, making a total of five corps organized in France, and the arrival of American combatant troops in Italy was announced today by Gen. March, the chief of staff.

The Eighty-fifth division, from Camp Custer, Mich., one of the last divisions to leave for France, has been made a part of the Fifth corps.

As organized, each of the five American army corps in France consists of six divisions, each with a combatant strength of 27,000 men, and a total force of combatant and supply troops of 45,000 men to the division. This gives a total of 810,000 combatant troops and of 1,350,000 troops of all arms welded together into the American army in France.

Four New Commanders Selected.

Announcement was made of the assignment of temporary commanding generals for four of the five corps. Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett previously had been given command of the First corps. The new commanders are: Maj. Gens. Robert L. Bullard, Second corps; William M. Wright, Third corps; George W. Read, Fourth corps; Omar Bundy, Fifth corps.

Organization of the five army corps in France, Gen. March explained, does not mean that this will stop the brigading of American divisions with the French and British. The divisions will be brigaded, where necessary, as before, but will go into the American corps organization when they complete their training at the front.

With 50,000 troops sent last week the number of American soldiers transported overseas during July is expected to reach a record of 300,000.

New Troops Assigned.

In announcing the formation of two more corps, Gen. March explained that the divisions comprising them and other corps are assigned before they leave this country, to be mobilized as corps after their training has been completed. With this understanding, he said, the Eighty-third national army, Maj. Gen. E. F. Glenn; Eighty-ninth national army, Brig. Gen. John S. Winn; Thirty-seventh national guard, Maj. Gen. William S. Farnsworth; Twenty-ninth national guard, Maj. Gen. Charles G. Morton; Ninetieth national army, Maj. Gen. Henry B. Allen; Ninety-second (Negro) national army, Maj. Gen. C. C. Ballou, have been assigned to the fourth corps.

Now on the Vosges.

In answer to a question, Gen. March said the Thirty-second national guard division, composed principally of Michigan troops, and commanded by Maj. Gen. Haan, is now in the Vosges, a quiet sector.

Maj. Gen. John Ruckman, recently commander of the southern department, has been assigned to command the North Atlantic coast artillery district, Gen. March announced.

Gen. March also announced the composition of the first four regular army divisions, among the first to be sent to France. They follow:

First division—Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Twenty-sixth, and Twenty-eighth infantry, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh field artillery.

Second division—Fifth and Sixth marine regiments, Ninth and Twenty-third infantry, Twelfth, Fifteenth, and Seventeenth field artillery.

Third division—Fourth, Seventh, Thirtieth, and Thirty-eighth infantry, Tenth, Eighteenth, and Twenty-sixth field artillery.

Fourth division—Thirty-ninth, Forty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, and Fifty-ninth infantry, and the Thirteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventy-seventh field artillery.

Gen. Liggett's Career.

The first corps is commanded by Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, a brilliant officer, who prefers the saddle to the swivel chair.

"Though a strict disciplinarian, he wins and holds the regard of those under him, and I think the first thing that occurs to those of us who have been with him is the lovable qualities of the man," said a war department official today.

"Gen. Liggett is known for his coolheadedness, his ability as an organizer, and as a tactician. He is low spoken and mild of voice, but remarkably forceful.

"It was at the Fort Riley maneuvers in 1906 that his handling of infantry attracted attention to him as a tactician. He is considered to have wonderful ability in that line. He has a remarkable military head."

Gen. Liggett has given especial attention to the civil war, and few men have so great a grasp of the campaigns of that conflict. He is a great admirer of both Grant and Lee.

Bundy Philippine Fighter.

Brig. Gen. Bundy, commanding the Fifth corps, was born at Newcastle, Ind., and was a student at De Pauw until he entered West Point in 1878.

He first won distinction as a fighter in the Philippines at the battle of Bud-Dajo—Mount Dajo—when as a major he led a column of men up the side of an extinct volcano to attack 1,000 Moros in the crater. Fifty-two per cent of his men in one company fell, 50 in another; still the line kept moving forward, held to its course by the commander, and cleaned out the enemy.

In 1915 Col. Bundy was detailed as adjutant general at San Antonio, Tex. In connection with Pershing's expedition into Mexico unusual administrative responsibility fell on him, and the manner in which he discharged this no doubt made a further impression on Pershing. After war was declared in 1917 Bundy was made a brigadier general and ordered to France.

A quiet man is Bundy, but sociable. He is a student of military subjects and was for a time an instructor in the infantry school of the line at Fort Leavenworth.

Bullard Tireless Worker.

Three army officers who were asked about Gen. Robert L. Bullard, now commanding the Second corps, struck the same note—that he was a tireless worker. He is a big man, but light of foot, a type of energy. He is a believer in young men, and persists in being a young man himself, though he was born in 1861.

Gen. Bullard's energy and ability were shown in guarding the border in the late Mexican trouble, and there is no doubt that the activity he displayed there from 1915 to 1917 was influential in his selection by Pershing for service in France.

The commander of the Twenty-sixth infantry had two diversions from the strain of guarding the border at a critical time. One was hunting wildcats. That was a favorite pastime with the sportsmen down there, and Gen. Bullard is a lover of all kinds of sports. Dogs are especially trained to trail the wildcats and the hunts take place at night, when the weather is misty. Often the hunt lasts all night. Gen. Bullard did not mind that if it happened at a time when things had quieted down along the border.

FROM JAPAN

Gen. Uyehara, Chief of Staff, at Tokio, Congratulates American Army.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27.—Congratulations upon the successes of the American troops in France have been received by Gen. March, chief of staff, from Gen. Baron Y Uyehara, chief of staff of the imperial Japanese army. In thanking Gen. Uyehara on behalf of the American army, Gen. March announced that the message of congratulations was being forwarded to Gen. Pershing for publication to the American expeditionary forces.

The message from Gen. Uyehara as made public tonight by the war department follows:

"Please accept my sincerest congratulations on the recent brilliant success won by your gallant army on the French battlefield. I am looking forward with absolute confidence to the continued favorable development of the situation, and I feel fortified in my convictions for the final triumph of our common cause."

Gen. March in replying said:

"Your message is deeply appreciated by the United States army, and I am repeating it to Gen. Pershing for publication to the American expeditionary forces in order that they may be made aware of your interest in their fight for our common cause towards the final triumph of which our two countries are jointly contributing. On behalf of the American army I sincerely thank you for your message, which is prized very highly."

Repel Foe in Albania; Inflict Heavy Loss

ROME, July 27.—The official communication issued by the war office today says:

"In Albania the fighting near Muci bridge continued yesterday. Reinforced, the enemy repeatedly attacked, trying to drive us from the river. He was beaten off and suffered heavy losses. We captured a hundred prisoners and some machine guns.

"An enemy attempt to cross the Semini west of Jagowdina failed. In the bend of the Devoli on the western slopes of Mali Siloves, an enemy column advancing to attack Hill 760 was repulsed."

YANKEE AIRMAN IN FIRST FLIGHT GETS BOCHE 'ACE'

Lieut. Avery Forces Capt. Mendkopf, 16 Victories, Down.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.

[UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

WITH THE AMERICANS IN FRANCE, July 27.—Lieut. Walter Avery of Columbus, O., in his first air battle brought down the noted German ace, Capt. Mendkopf, north of Chateau Thierry yesterday.

Hun Tricks Fail.

The rival aviators came together while patrolling alone. For twenty minutes Mendkopf made futile effort to gain an advantage by tricky maneuvers. Then Avery got on the German's tail and damaged the plane so that it was forced to land within the American lines.

When Mendkopf learned this was Avery's initial fight he was enraged. He sulked and refused to talk. Mendkopf is credited with sixteen victims, including an American. He is one of only six German aviators who wear the cross of merit.

Made a Mistake.

Another American airman, after hearing of Avery's exploit, went out hunting on his hook this morning.

He tackled a Boche and forced him down and landed to complete the capture. But he discovered that he was behind the German lines and he himself was made a prisoner.

PARIS ESCAPED 1914 VANDALISM, SAYS GENERAL

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable. [Copyright: 1918.]

PARIS, July 27.—General Maunoury, who in 1914 commanded the army of Paris and ordered the famous attack on the Ourcq which brought about the overthrow of Von Kluck and the victory of the Marne, gives, in a preface he has written to a book entitled "How Paris Was Saved," hints as to what the fate of Paris would have been had it fallen into the German hands.

Thanks to the courage of her troops, he says, Paris "escaped from the fury and vandalism that Von Kluck boasted in one of his camps at the beginning of September, 1914, he intended to make the French capital a victim of."

This is the first official hint that the Germans in 1914 intended to put Paris to fire and sword.

Widow Hears of Death of Lieut. Col. Hand Abroad

Sioux City, Ia., July 27.—Lieut. Col. Russel C. Hand died July 21 from wounds received in action in France, according to a message received by his widow tonight from the war department. Hand had been in the army over twenty years.

ROME, July 27.—Hostilities have occurred between Turkish and Bulgarians along the Adrianople-Dedeagatch railway, according to advices from Switzerland today.

TWENTY U-BOATS OFF U. S. COAST, HAMBURG SAYS

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

GENEVA, Switzerland, July 27.—A dispatch received at Basel, Switzerland, today from Hamburg says:

"More than twenty large submarines are now operating off the American coast. The number of submarines in the Atlantic has been increased by 30 per cent in the last seven months."

No German denial, official or unofficial, has been made concerning the recent statement of a Swiss engineer who returned to Genoa from Kiel that the harbor there is full of damaged submarines and that it is difficult to find crews for the U-boat service.

Vessel Is Attacked.

New York, July 27.—A British freight steamer was attacked by a German submarine off the Atlantic coast early today, according to reports received in insurance circles here. The position of the ship, which was sending out S. O. S. calls, was said to be near the regular transatlantic steamship lane.

Hear Call for Help.

Boston, Mass., July 27.—A wireless call for "armed assistance" was picked up on Sunday evening off the Maine coast by a steam trawler which came into port today, according to the wireless operator, Walter C. Bay. The message was suddenly interrupted, he said, and he was unable to get the vessel's name or position. Several hours previously a German submarine had attacked the tug Perth Amboy and its barges off Cape Cod.

KAISER, SAFE IN A TOWER, URGES TROOPS TO FIGHT

AMSTERDAM, July 27.—Emperor William, who, according to his favorite correspondent, Karl Rosner, watched the battle of Reims from a tower which gave him a good view of a wide sector of the front, sent to his troops from this vantage point, Rosner reports, the following telegram:

"His majesty informs his troops that he has arrived behind the front of the attack and will watch the battle from a tower. His majesty's good wishes accompany his troops. His majesty's word to his troops is: 'With God for the emperor and the empire.'"

This telegram was sent on July 15 at the opening of the German offensive, which was so promptly checked and then completely broken by the allies' counter attack. Rosner, who accompanies the emperor in these battle front excursions and describes them in florid style in dispatches to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, says the emperor mounted the eighty foot tower early on this day to watch the battle.

"At 3 o'clock in the morning," continued Rosner, "the emperor turns to a staff officer and says:

"'The army shall know that I am with it in these serious hours and that my wishes accompany it.'

"A few moments later, at a shaky table, by the dim light of a small pocket lamp, he signs the telegram, which he immediately dispatches to all his troops."

500 Laborers Go on Strike at Ore Docks in Duluth

Duluth, Minn., July 27.—Over 500 laborers on the Allouez ore docks of the Great Northern railroad walked out tonight, two and a half hours after they presented demands for increases in wages.

AIRSHIP LENDS INTEREST TO FETE AT LAKE FOREST

Society Gathers at the Home of Mrs. Franklin P. Smith.

Lake Forest, Ill., July 27.—[Special.]—An airship from the Great Lakes Naval Training station, which happened to be flying overhead for a while during the afternoon, added interest to the fête which was held this afternoon and evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin P. Smith of Lake Forest.

The entertainment was given under the auspices of the National Defense committee, Chicago chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and the proceeds will go to the woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, Illinois division.

Dance in Pavilion.

On one side of the tennis court was a tiny playhouse where a palmist told fortunes; a jackie band played while many of the young people danced in the gaily decorated pavilion erected on the lawn.

Little Daisiana Smith, clad in blue overalls, helped entertain the guests, and Phoebe Fuller, daughter of Mrs. F. R. Fuller, regent of the Chicago chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, carried about a tiny dog to be sold. Carlos Drake and his guest, F. W. Phoeninghaus, were dressed in Spanish costume with red Tam O'Shanters.

From Coffee to Pig.

Mrs. Walter Larsen was in charge of the grab tree for the children. Upon the vine covered veranda of the house was a large booth covered with assorted articles, including everything from cans of coffee to a little black pig, in charge of Miss Sylvia Mueller.

At another table were cakes and other delicacies, presided over by Mrs. A. M. Clement and Mrs. Ellsworth Gross. Mrs. W. D. Washburn sold fresh vegetables. Mrs. Morris M. Townley gave a selection of songs and Miss Sylvia De Tell of the Chicago Grand Opera company danced.

A French market was conducted by members of the Junior league under the chairmanship of Miss Katherine Pierce. Flowers were sold by Mabel M. Keelin, Marie Blome, and Clara Pierson. Mrs. Mark Walton, captain in the Illinois motor corps, directed the dancing pavilion and other attractions.

Council Is Represented.

Mrs. Charles Frankenthal represented the woman's committee of the Council of Defense and the Chicago chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution were represented by Mrs. Arthur C. Dow, Mrs. Mark Walton, Miss Betty Hoyt, Miss Katharine Blossom, Miss Mary Crerar, Miss Edith Rosenfield, Miss Louise Thorne, and Miss Eleanor Holden assisted the chairman. Mrs. Eric Gerstenberg and Miss Alice Gerstenberg were there, as were Mrs. W. A. Alexander, Mrs. John A. Orb, Mrs. Robert Hoyt, Mrs. John Curtis, Mrs. Archibald Freer, Miss Sarah Washburn, and others.

Arrest Cleveland Editor on Charge of Espionage

Cleveland, O., July 27.—Richard Brenne, editor of the Waechter und Anzeiger, Cleveland German daily, was arrested today by federal officers charged with violating the espionage act. The arrest and charge are based on a news story published in the Waechter last Wednesday under an Amsterdam date, which is said to have led to the conclusion, according to the district attorney, that "hundreds of thousands of Americans were sacrificed by the French."

Foch Let Petain Start Drive When the Huns Were Pocketed.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, July 26.—The French prime minister is a constant visitor to the battlefield. Yesterday it was the turn of the president of the republic, who, during the afternoon, passed by way of the forest of Villers Cotterets to some of the recovered villages on its eastern edge.

At one of the posts of command which he entered Poincare saw among a group of prisoners awaiting examination Capt. von Bulow, a nephew of the German ex-chancellor, who was captured yesterday morning with the whole of his battalion.

The president took the occasion of decorating with the Cordon of the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor Gen. Fayolle, who will be remembered as commander of the French sixth army during the Somme offensive, and who, as chief of a group of French armies, has had an important part in the present happy reversal of the allied fortunes.

The ceremony took place in the garden of a little house within hearing of the guns on what was once a lawn and is now a potato patch. Gens. Petain and Mangin were present.

Superior French Strategy.

The more one considers the development of even this in the last critical weeks the more clear it is that the allied victory is due to the superior planning by the French command, based upon sober estimates of the forces and possibilities at the present moment.

There is a very marked difference of morale between the allied and the German armies. German officers captured yesterday at Villemontoire (who, by the way, say Ludendorff prepared the great offensive either in Flanders or Alsace) make no attempt to hide the discouragement of their men. At the beginning of last week, on the other hand, they were pretty confident as to the results of the attack they were about to make. They were mostly picked troops, prepared in every way, and until their case was hopeless they fought with the utmost courage.

This was not a decisive factor, nor was there a decisive difference in the numbers and armament. On the whole, though not in every part, the enemy had the advantage in that regard, but there was a difference in staff work markedly in our favor which, when supported by the rising morale among the allied troops and falling morale on the other side, became decisive.

Fault at Berlin.

From the beginning of the war the work of the grand staff in Berlin, often of the most evident excellence, has been vitiated by the tendency to depreciate its adversary and to trust too much to a single big blow. From time to time this tendency degenerates into sheer infatuation.

The German plan for this offensive was so grandiose that, in view of the forces available to execute it, it could not have been justified, except on the aforesaid supposition that the French army was nearly exhausted.

I accurately stated this plan on July 17. It was to break through on the left to Chalons and Revigny, on the right to Epernay and Montmirail, and the French armies, having been thus cut asunder, to turn either against Paris, on the west, or against the armies of the eastern frontier, from Verdun to Belfort, which taken in the rear, would yield in a vastly larger surrender of Sedan.

In 1914 the battle of the Marne was covered by the defense of the eastern frontier by Castelnau and Dubail. This month's offensive on each side of the Ourcq has been covered by the defense of the Champagne front—the elastic defense which has been described in earlier dispatches.

Gen. Gauraud's success was the condition of success of the whole plan, but from the first, before the German attack launched on Monday of last week, the French command saw the opportunity for a counter offensive and, without exaggerating what was possible for it at this stage of the war, prepared to deliver it.

Proof of Strategy.

Lest I be suspected even by German readers of making a case I will support this little revelation with precise dates. The army of Von Boehn had hardly got settled down on the Marne when the possibility of delivering a blow at its west flank was realized by French general headquarters. A series of French attacks from the edge of the Villers-Cotterets forest toward the open plateaux from the middle of June to the beginning of this month were the preliminaries to this.

Indications of the approach of the German offensive of July 15 stimulated the plan and preparations. The necessary divisions were concentrated between Montdidier and Villers-Cotterets.

After consultation with Gens. Fayolle, Mangin, and De Goutte Gen. Petain presented his plan to Gen. Foch on July 12. On July 13 it was returned approved.

Troops Hidden in Forests.

On July 17 and 18 all troops were brought into the leafy shelter of the Villers-Cotterets region and the artillery into its emplacements, which had been made ready two days before. Boehn had not the faintest notion of what was going on. He was too sure of himself and his masters too sure that the French were done for and that the Americans were good for nothing to suspect. We know what followed.

Stopped dead in Champagne, the enemy crossed the Marne from Chateau Thierry to Dormans. Foch and Petain, with cool heads, let them get in a little deeper. Then, on July 19, Mangin and De Goutte were unleashed against the feeble west flank of the advance. Its first positions were carried with a rush. At 4 p. m. after renewed artillery preparation the second and stronger positions were attacked, and they were quickly mastered. The enemy command for the moment lost its head, and there is even reason to believe that a general retreat to the Aisne was ordered.

Needed Strong U. S. Army.

If we had had only a strong American army available it would have been for Boehn a first class disaster, for within the salient, only thirty by twenty miles in extent, he had crowded thirty-five divisions of troops, with their artillery, munitions services, and supplies, a region, moreover, having only one free railway line and four small and two large roads, of which one was under our fire.

This disaster has been avoided, but the defeat is one the moral effect of which may be as serious as its immediate material consequences.

So far seventy German divisions have been identified in the course of this battle. The German losses are variously estimated at from 120,000 to 200,000 men, 25,000 prisoners, with 400 cannon, several thousand machine guns, and much miscellaneous soil has been taken from the German army, to say the least of it.

It is discovered that a large part of the 1919 class has been engaged in the battle. The class of 1920 will be sent into the field in September, instead of later. The retreat continues and the German people is distracted. The contrasting picture of the allied camp I need not draw. We may, indeed, be confident.

MUST END WAR THIS YEAR TO ESCAPE U. S., GERMANS TOLD

AMSTERDAM, July 27.—Expressing the view that the present battle between the Aisne and the Marne rivers must end in a preliminary decision, the military critic of the Vossiche Zeitung of Berlin says:

"It cannot be to our interest to allow the war to drag on into the years 1919 and 1920, as the British, above all, desire, because they hope by then that American millions will have reached Europe and that Americans, by force of numbers will be able to achieve a break through.

"An American danger is facing us, but at the decisive moment an attack by our reserves will bring victory."

AUSTRIA PREMIER HINTS AT CLOSER BONDS TO BERLIN

Baron von Hussarek Demands Internal Power to Back Armies.

AMSTERDAM, July 27.—Baron von Hussarek, the new Austro-Hungarian premier, in unfolding his policy in the lower house of parliament, has said, according to advices from Vienna:

"In firm union with Germany, with which we are united in unshakeable friendship and loyalty, and with which we are about to be more closely united, it is now imperative to enforce a successful end to this terrible struggle. After a year of severe trial, it is now time to realize the intentions which the central empires' statesmen repeatedly have unanimously stated, which threaten no one, and which aim at a general reconciliation of the people. The Austrian government will contribute all in its power to the attainment of this ardently desired end.

Must Have Internal Power.

"For the attainment of this aim the outward manifestation of power alone does not suffice. There must also be a development of internal strength. An absolute condition, therefore, is constitutional coöperation with parliament, to which the government will scrupulously adhere."

After saying that his program comprised the immediate passing of the Hungarian budget and the making of preparations to clear up national life problems, including the creation of satisfactory conditions for the entire population and in the development of social welfare organizations, Premier Hussarek said:

"Our efforts must be directed toward the creation of a basis for trustful coöperation with parliament, which, however, cannot materialize without mutual frankness and straightforwardness.

Justice to All Races.

"In this respect we first look to those groups which have formerly, on principle, supported our state in its most serious struggle, and we are conscious of our obligations toward them. We desire, however, to gain at least such a degree of confidence from those not on our side as may be possible from loyal opponents. Justice toward all—toward every race and every class—must, however, be and continue to be our guiding principle."

Baron von Hussarek's speech was generally applauded, though the German radicals shouted:

"Where is the German course?"

COVENTRY STILL OUT AS BRITISH STRIKE CRUMBLES

Many Munition Workers Return to Jobs After Draft Threat.

LONDON, July 27.—Striking munitions workers, at a massmeeting in Coventry today, adopted resolutions that they would not return to work until the embargo on skilled labor was removed.

Strikers in other cities began returning to work today. The backbone of the strike seems broken as the result of the government's threat to enforce conscription and put the idle into the army unless all were back at their jobs by Monday.

In Birmingham especially many returned to the munitions plants.

Prepare to Draft Strikers.

Military officials were preparing summonses tonight for the strikers to appear for examination Monday, preparatory to induction into military service, in case they persist in refusing to resume work.

The ministry of munitions is receiving many telegrams from workmen's meetings condemning the strikers' attitude. A typical resolution was addressed by the Worcester branch to their "comrades in the great war." It said:

"The strikers should be sent to France forthwith, skilled men in the trenches replacing them. We pledge ourselves to support the government in any action to compel the strikers to do their duty to their country."

Winston Churchill, minister of munitions, called the attention of the workers to the request of the trades union advisory committee that all strikers resume work.

Papers Indorse Lloyd George.

London morning newspapers generally indorse the ultimatum.

"The strike is bald defiance of the government," declared the Times. "The ultimatum will have the support of a large majority of the people."

Denouncing men who "wantonly hold up munitions to our soldiers," the Chronicle declared that sternest measures must be expected.

The Daily News called Lloyd George's decision the gravest in the history of English industrial strife.

PACT OF SILENCE IS FOLLOWED BY DIVORCE ACTION

Jan. 1, 1916, Harris Miller, 3221 Ogden avenue, and his wife, Lena, adopted a novel New Year's resolution. That resolution, according to Mrs. Miller's bill for separate maintenance, filed in the Superior court yesterday, was that neither would speak to the other thereafter. This resolution, Mrs. Miller's bill goes on to assert, has been sedulously kept, save when the defendant indulged in the language of blows. He gave her, she asserts, a black eye occasionally, but spoke to her never.

The Millers, the bill relates, are still living at the Ogden avenue address for the simple reason that each claims the property. Mrs. Miller asks the custody of the two small children and alimony. Her husband, she asserts, has two businesses which afford him a monthly income of $2,000. A large part of this is said to be profit derived from the sale of shoes to the United States government.

Judge Fitch yesterday granted Mrs. Miller an injunction restraining her husband from disposing of any of his funds in the West Side Trust and Savings bank.

VICTIM OF VILLA VANISHES HERE

H. C. W. Von Werner, formerly a ranchman in Mexico, with a fortune estimated at $500,000, is being sought by the police at the request of Mrs. Von Werner, who believes her husband has met with some evil.

Von Werner's poverty, directly traceable to Villa, the bandit and revolutionist, who rased his ranch and ran off his herds, is declared to have preyed on the ranchman's mind. He was 60 years old when he fled Mexico three years ago. Mrs. Von Werner has been working in a department store to make ends meet.

Von Werner had lived in hope of selling his ranch and this was almost accomplished last week, but the deal fell through, whereat Von Werner grew despondent.

A. J. Allyn's Divorce Plea Recalls Another Case

A divorce bill filed in the Superior court yesterday by Attorney Robert Schupp in behalf of Arthur J. Allyn charges Mrs. Anna E. Allyn, the latter's wife, with infidelity. According to the bill, the Allyns were married May 8, 1917, and in April, 1918, he alleges she was guilty of misconduct with William J. Lyons, after which he refused to live with her.

In April Judge Guerin dismissed the suit of Lieut. Arthur J. Allyn, who asked a divorce from his wife, Mrs. Anna E. Allyn, on charges of misconduct at Camp Custer, Mich. Lieut. Allyn has since resigned from the army.

According to the evidence submitted at the time, Maj. E. C. Jackson of the medical corps of the camp charged that Bert Beardslee, a young man of Grand Rapids, had been ordered from Mrs. Allyn's room in the hotel where she was living. Mrs. Allyn filed an answer in which she charged her husband with cruelty.

U. S. AND BRITAIN PUT FINAL SEAL ON ARMY TREATY

Washington, D. C., July 27.—Ratifications of the British and Canadian recruiting treaties with the United States will be exchanged in London next Tuesday. From July 31 to Sept. 28, both inclusive, British subjects in the United States, including declarants who are of present United States draft age, have their last chance of enlisting, if they wish, in the British and Canadian armies. After Sept. 28 they become liable to compulsory service, under the draft law, in the United States army.

British subjects, including declarants, 20 years or more and between 31 and 44, both inclusive, are within the recruiting conventions. For these men, President Wilson will appoint a day on which they will have to register. For thirty days after that day they will have their last chance of voluntarily enlisting in the British and Canadian armies.

If British subjects desire to be exempted by the British ambassador from military service under the conventions, they should apply as soon as possible—Canadians to Ottawa, and others to Washington.

Svithoid Order Expresses Loyalty to Uncle Sam

The Independent Order of Svithoid, a Swedish fraternal beneficiary organization, held the final session of its twenty-sixth annual meeting yesterday at the Hotel Sherman. The order has over 10,000 members throughout the country, including a uniformed rank of several thousand members.

At yesterday's meeting resolutions were adopted expressing the utmost loyalty to the government, including aid in conservation and in every other particular required for war purposes. The constitution of the order was also changed to conform with war conditions.

The following officers for 1918-'19 were elected: President, August Lindeberg, Chicago; vice president, Mrs. Clara Larson, Minneapolis; secretary, John A. Sandgren, Chicago, reelected for seventeenth consecutive term; treasurer, John Carson, Melrose Park, Ill.; directors, A. P. Olson, F. C. E. Lindquist, W. M. Patterson, John A. Swanson, Aaron Miller, Joseph Sheldon, Nels H. Olson, Andrew Ringstrom, all of Chicago.

This afternoon at the Hotel La Salle there will be a dinner of the uniformed rank.

Hold Patriotic Pageant on Jackson Park Beach

One thousand people participated in a patriotic pageant at Jackson park yesterday afternoon to celebrate the opening of the old Hyde Park High school branch building, to be used as a community center for the Hyde Park and Kenwood districts.

The lake front from Fifty-sixth street to the Liberty building was lined with spectators, mostly clad in bathing suits. Participating in the parade were women emergency drivers, Red Cross workers, ten floats, 400 hundred jackies from the training school at the municipal pier, a company of the Illinois reserve militia, and a jackie band.

U-Boat Rams Lifeboats After Sinking French Ship

SANTANDER, Spain, July 27.—A German submarine, after torpedoing the French steamer Lydie off Zumaya, rammed the lifeboats in an effort to destroy traces of the sinking, according to members of the crew. Forty of the crew of forty-six are missing today.

EARLY RETURNS SHOW FERGUSON LOSING IN TEXAS

Dallas, Tex., July 27.—Gov. William P. Hobby went far into the lead in the early returns of today's Democratic primary. Returns from 147 precincts which represented widely separated sections of the state gave him 23,784 votes for the nomination for governor as against 8,952 for James E. Ferguson, former governor, who was removed from office by impeachment proceedings.

Returns from nineteen towns gave Hobby 8,004 votes as against Ferguson's 2,295. These same towns in 1916 gave Ferguson 3,360, Ball 3,214.

At 10:15 o'clock the Dallas News issued a comparison of the previous election, based on the facts at hand, saying that 740,000 votes had been cast and that Hobby had been nominated by a majority of 250,000 votes.

YOUTH, 19, HELD IN HUNT FOR $30,000 JEWEL ROBBERS

Roy Rose, 19 years old, was arrested yesterday in connection with the search for the four men who on Friday robbed the jewelry store of J. M. Sandack at 6217 South Halsted street of $30,000 in diamonds and money.

Rose lives at 6225 South Sangamon street and is said to have visited the Sandack store on the day before the robbery. Chief Mooney of the detective bureau says the youth has told several conflicting stories. Several merchants in the vicinity of the Sandack store identified Rose as one of four men seen driving about in a car like the one used in the robbery.

Myrtle Pettiford, Mrs. Duffy Mendelsohn, and Tony Melf, who were arrested at 4713 Indiana avenue, still are being held. Several other suspects also are in custody.

Miss Nan Gore Becomes Bride of Capt. Murch

Word was received in Chicago yesterday of the marriage of Miss Nan Gore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Gore of 4518 Oakenwald avenue, to Capt. Harold Murch of the United States army at Williamstown, Mass. The bridegroom is from Boston and has been a military instructor at Williams college. According to information given at the Gore home last night, Capt. and Mrs. Murch became acquainted last summer. The bride was formerly vice president of the Sunbeam league and has been active in Red Cross work. The members of her family went east to attend the ceremony.

Leaders of Paper Workers Vote to Go Back to Jobs

Albany, N. Y., July 27.—Representatives of employés of the International Paper company of several New York and New England cities, who have been idle for several days because of differences with the corporation over an interpretation of an award of the federal war labor board and whose idleness has curtailed the output of the plants by about 75 per cent, voted tonight to instruct the workmen to resume work Monday morning.

$25 for Smokes for Yanks from Detective Sergeants

With a contribution of $25, the Chicago Association of Detective Sergeants increased yesterday the total of THE TRIBUNE tobacco fund for soldiers in France. The amount previously acknowledged is $12,962.62, making the total to date $12,987.62.

Some one who believes in the lucky thirteenth has a chance today to send the total to the $13,000 mark. Who wants to contribute $12.38?

CHICAGOANS FALL IN BATTLE; TWO DEAD, FIVE HURT

Lieutenant Only Twenty Years Old Killed in Action.

The muffled drums have sounded for two Chicago lieutenants, slain while fighting in France. Yesterday's casualty list contained the names of two dead, four severely wounded, and one slightly wounded. Of these, all but one were in the official list.

Lieut. John W. Cowan, 20 years old, killed in action, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Cowan, 6935 Chappell avenue. On graduating from the Hyde Park High school in June, 1916, he enlisted in the Illinois militia and was with Pershing in the Villa chase on the border. Returning home, he entered the Mississippi State Agricultural college, but at the declaration of war, enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-ninth artillery, "Reilly's Bucks," and was rapidly promoted to a commission. His father is an insurance broker at 37 West Jackson boulevard.

Wounded on May 14.

Lieut. Walter J. Blum, reported slightly wounded, was shot in the face on May 14. Lieut. Blum is a graduate of the engineering school of the University of Illinois, and received his commission at the second officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan. He formerly lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William T. Blum, 2522 North Rockwell street. His brother, Harry J. Blum, is in the navy. Lieut. Blum reported his own wound in a letter home.

Private Dominick Fattore, 9534 Avenue M, South Chicago, listed as severely wounded, was with the first draft contingent to leave South Chicago. Fattore is 22 years old. His father, Santa Fattore, 45 years old, is fighting the Austrians in the Italian army, under Gen. Diaz.

Private Vincent Lodi, severely wounded, is 31 years old and before entering the army last year was Vincent Lazzaroni. He was employed in the Santa Fé railroad shops and sent part of his pay check to his parents in Brescia, North Italy. Draft officials told him that men with dependent families would not go, so he changed his name to Lodi. He lived with his sister, Mrs. Plerina Romolo, 1507 South Spaulding avenue.

Dies of Pneumonia.

Sergt. John Raymond Reeder, a former resident of Chicago and a member of Company E, One Hundred and Thirty-first infantry, was announced in Thursday's TRIBUNE as having died of pneumonia. He was a former employé of Marshall Field & Co. His parents live in Tipton, Ia.

Mrs. Lena Winters, 646 Dole avenue, last night received the announcement from the war department that her son, Private Ralph Van Brocklin of Company G, One Hundred and Thirty-second infantry, has been severely wounded in action. He enlisted in May, 1917, and went across in May a year later.

The death in action of Private William Treadmann, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Treadman, 743 South Desplaines street, was announced in yesterday's TRIBUNE, as was the severe wounding of Corp. Lester O. Whitson, son of Mrs. Emma Whitson, 6816 Olcott avenue, and Private Frank C. Jacobs, son of Charles H. Jacobs, 5735 Indiana avenue.

The death of Lieut. Richard E. Lloyd of 1627 North Springfield avenue after an airplane accident was announced in yesterday's TRIBUNE, although not yet officially listed.

DEARTH AFTER WAR, WARNING

AMSTERDAM, July 27.—In an article quoted by the Berlin Socialist newspaper Vorwaerts Dr. Georg Michaelis, former Geman imperial chancellor, warns the German nation that there will be a time of dearth after the war because of lack of shipping.

"Let us not indulge in the idea that all distress will come to an end and happiness begin if our enemies indemnify us for our billions of war debt," he added. "Everything depends upon how we face the period of distress. The billions of the war of 1870 did us great harm."

DANCE IN STREET FOR YANK WIN

A street dance to evidence our joy "over here" and commemorate the recent victories of our boys "over there" was held last night by the Triangle Business Men's association.

Wrightwood avenue, between Lincoln avenue and Halsted street, was blocked off as the dancing prado, and more than 1,000 couples, young and old, took part in the celebration.

Homes on both sides of the street were draped with American flags and bunting, with Japanese lanterns furnishing the illumination.

The dance was opened with a patriotic address by Ald. Walter Steffens. A neighborhood band furnished the music.

Two French Officers and U. S. Sergeant Drowned

Deming, N. M., July 27.—Lieut. Lambert Herbert and Lieut. Jean Jegou, French officers, instructors at Camp Cody, were drowned last night in White Water creek, ten miles southeast of Silver City, N. M., when a torrent of water from a cloudburst in the mountains overturned the motor car in which they were riding and swept it into the swollen stream. Sergt. Ernest Picard of the United States army, who was driving, also lost his life. Picard's home was in Worcester, Mass. The officers were returning from a visit with friends at Tyrone and Silver City when the accident occurred.

MAXIM GORKY'S 7 PEACE TERMS EYED BY EUROPE

Thought to Have Originated from German Foe of Pan-Germanism.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.
[SPECIAL CABLE TO CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

STOCKHOLM, July 27.—Maxim Gorky's publication of the seven peace propositions, which he intimates Germany submitted to the Spanish government as a basis for an international conference, was accepted by informal circles throughout Europe as a highly important utterance for two reasons.

First, as probably reaching Gorky from Dr. Rietzler, Germany's most important man in Russia today.

Second, as constituting the utmost peace program which rational German statesmen can put over in face of the German general staff. Dr. Rietzler was former Chancellor Bethmann Hollweg's private secretary and reputed to be the originator of some of Hollweg's most important utterances. Rietzler always was considered a great thinker and conciliator, and as such he was hated by the pan-Germanists.

He was regarded by the Germans behind the scenes as the safest man in the empire, but was not widely known.

Here are Seven Points.

Maxim Gorky's seven peace points are summarized below:

First, Germany demands no annexations or contributions in the west.

Second, that the treaties already concluded with Russia and Roumania remain valid.

Third, that the principle of self-determination be maintained and applied according to the peace congress decisions.

Fourth, that Belgium's destiny be decided by a peace congress.

Fifth, that the Balkan questions be similarly settled.

Sixth, free seas, with Gibraltar and the Suez canal forts dismantled and Germany allowed to have coaling stations.

Seventh, that the rights of German colonies be restored, as before the war.

Finland to Fight Allies?

Montgomery Grove, the English consul at Helsingfors, has informed travelers that he fears Finland will soon be dragged into the war on Germany's side, and that he expects to depart at any time.

City Hall Machine's Use of School Bared by Documents.

was widely advertised by Mr. Bodine that a number of widows and orphans were being taken care of with census jobs, but several applications found to have been placed on file indicate that the lucky widows and orphans had to have other "qualifications" to get on the pay roll.

An instance of the action with regard to Democrats is found in the experience of Anton Kaczynski, 1729 West Seventeenth street. He was put on the rolls at the request of Trustee Jacob M. Loeb on the recommendation of Congressman A. J. Sabath early in March. A week later Mr. Volz wrote Mr. Bodine that he had been notified that this man and two other Democrats had been listed for appointment in the Eleventh ward, "to which our representative desires to register objection." Mr. Volz adds succinctly: "This is for your information."

Widow's Application Filed.

Democratic Committeeman Frank Paschen had heard about the jobs open for widows and wrote on March 27 to Mr. Bodine for a place for Lillie K. Perkins, 2035 North Leavitt street, describing her as a "widow with two small children depending upon her." The letter was marked "file."

The widow without political sponsorship seemed also to have been given no consideration. A letter from Mrs. Francis Pirrmann, 4716 Winthrop avenue (Twenty-fifth ward), also was marked for filing.

"I am a widow," she wrote Mr. Bodine, "having lost my husband about two years ago. I have a little boy and this little work would have helped me a great deal. If you can see your way clear to put me to work I will appreciate it, as I understand that several from the ward are not going to accept."

The correspondence indicates that Samuel M. Hamilton, Thompson aldermanic candidate, and Mr. McAnsh had too many applications for anything to be left for her.

There is further proof that even after appointment a census employé's job was not safe unless he traveled the straight and narrow Thompson political pathway.

Criticism Costs Job.

One example of what happened to the politician who strove for efficiency other than political and who was reported to have left the Thompson factional gods for the Brundage altars is that of Mr. Ernest S. Duck of the Thirteenth ward. He had the temerity to criticize the work of a census taker in good political standing. That was treason and his political and census job was promptly snapped off.

The written notes in his case are illuminating. On March 31 Mr. Duck wrote the following to Mr. Bodine:

"I am sending to you Mr. Albert Arndt of the Thirteenth ward school census for instructions. (See Mr. Keith in reference to my talk over phone.) I am unable to decide if Mr. Arndt is inefficient. He says he took eight grades in public school. If not, it is carelessness. I will bring a sample of the work today. I do not have one sheet of reliable work to show for Mr. Arndt in four days in spite of giving him time for recopying and going over the ground myself."

Sequel to Complaint.

A note on school board stationery tells the sequel to Mr. Duck's complaint. It is signed Stephen Ball, one of the census jobholders, and reads:

"Mr. Duck states that the Thompson people got his discharge, as he had flopped over to the Brundage crowd, and he was going to have his discharge published in the paper. They ought to be proud of their new member, for he is another 'Coo-Coo.'"

Another selection of Mr. Volz did not give satisfaction and the letter of introduction which he carried from Mr. Volz to Mr. Bodine bears the notation, "Not accepted—revoked for cause." This man was William Schmidt, 1549 Milwaukee avenue. Mr. Volz had recommended him for one of the positions of central supervisor.

According to several letters, Committeeman George J. Feser of the Fourth ward and Committeeman Charles A. Williams of the Thirty-second ward, although Republicans, did not measure up with their applicants to the high standards required by Mr. Volz. A letter Mr. Feser wrote in behalf of one, Christopher Ronschusen, was marked "file" and a note written by Edith M. Dick for a constituent of Mr. Williams bears no notation of favorable action.

Volz Keeps Close Watch.

Mr. Volz apparently kept a sharp eye upon the census takers to see if they filled their jobs in a creditable manner. The following typical letter indicates his summary action when he saw the boys falling down on the work:

"Dear Mr. Bodine: Number 5 on the reserve list: I sent you on March 28 B. Schiller, 3605 West Thirteenth street, Thirty-fourth ward, has been found to be unqualified and I wish to substitute the name of Abe Kalish, 1219 South Avers avenue, Thirty-fourth ward, to be notified as soon as possible."

In one instance a man was found disqualified as a tabulator, but he was too valuable a person not to place at all, so room was found for him as an enumerator in the "industrial" census department. His name was Herman Wallace, 1646 West Sixty-fourth street. His letter of introduction to Mr. Bodine was faultless, bearing the signature of Mr. Volz.

Refreshing Pike's "Memory."

City Controller Eugene R. Pike was quoted in an afternoon paper yesterday as stating that he had asked for only two places on the 1916 census list.

"I met Mr. Ralph C. Otis [former member of the board] in the street one day," Mr. Pike said, "and he asked me if I couldn't recommend a few men to work on the census. I recommended John B. Strasburger and Carl Johnson."

"Who is Johnson?" he was asked.

"He is one of the boys in the ward club," Mr. Pike replied. "I really don't know him. I think either Ald. Walker or Ald. McCormick recommended him to me. I was just doing a favor for Mr. Otis."

New letters forthcoming yesterday indicate that Mr. Pike's memory has failed him concerning the census jobs or some one else has been using the controller's stationery to boss the north side job "mill" and signing his name. In one letter Mr. Pike seems to ask for a place for John J. Woods, 829 North La Salle street.

Other Pike Letters.

Besides this two others appear. These are both Pike applications. One is dated March 13 and is addressed to Mr. Bodine and reads:

"Regarding the application of Mrs. Mary Goodwin, owing to a clerical mistake in our office I gave her address as 441 instead of 541 Lincoln parkway. Consequently my letter to Mr. Otis was delayed two or three days in reaching her.

"I would appreciate it if you would see that she is properly placed. Thanking you very much for your courtesy, believe me,

"Very truly yours,
"EUGENE R. PIKE."

The second letter—to Mr. Otis—under date of March 11, 1916, is as follows:

"My Dear Mr. Otis: The bearer of this letter, Mrs. Mary Sherman of 1039 North Dearborn street, wishes to obtain employment with the census bureau staff. I should appreciate it very much if you can help her obtain this position.

"Very truly yours,
"EUGENE R. PIKE."

The letter shows also the notation "R. C. Otis."

Plea from Michaelson.

One of the new letters shows former Ald. M. A. Michaelson of the Thirty-third ward and now a candidate on the Thompson ticket for congress also in the rôle of suppliant for a census job. Mr. Michaelson's friend was Lee Dorf, a resident of the Thirty-fourth ward. According to the notation on the letter Mr. Bodine charged the man up to the Thirty-third ward.

Samuel H. Hamilton, the Thompson candidate for alderman in the Twenty-fifth ward in the 1916 campaign, appears in the second series of letters as still maintaining his position as a ready and fluent but generally futile writer for jobs.

In one letter he writes Mr. Bodine that Mrs. Edna Johnson be given a place. Writes Mr. Hamilton:

"Mrs. Edna Johnson, 3551 Wilton avenue, Thirteenth precinct, Twenty-fifth ward, was next on the list for census enumerator, and as Mrs. Keith could not serve I would ask that you give the position of census enumerator to Mrs. Johnson and I will appreciate it very much."

On the same day—March 27—he dictated the following letter to an applicant:

"Mrs. Ruth Wakefield, 855 Lakeside place, Chicago—Dear Madam: Herewith copy of my letter to Mr. Bodine. If you do not hear from this within the next day or two I would suggest that you call there in person and ask Mr. Bodine to refer to my letter of the 27th calling his attention to contents of the same."

A notation on the bottom of the letter shows that Mrs. Wakefield called at Mr. Bodine's office at 4 p. m. on March 31. A circle over the names of the woman and Hamilton fails to show if she got the place.

Mr. Volz, in addition to his first line trench forces, his reserves, and his noncombatants, so to speak, had a classification known as "fill-ins," as indicated by this missive:

"Chicago, March 21, 1916.—Dear Mr. Bodine: If you need a "fill-in" in the Twenty-sixth ward I would appreciate it if you could put on the party recommended in the attached letter: Miss Mary O'Rourke, 1731 Carmen avenue. Respectfully,

"LESLIE VOLZ."

And Mr. Volz wrote numerous other letters, some of which will appear tomorrow.

Mr Duck states that the Thompson peopl got his discharge as he had flopped over to the Brundge crowd and he was going to have his discharge published it the paper, They ought to be proud of their new member for he is a noche "Co Coo" Ball

Ernest S. Duck complained because of the inefficiency of a Thompson census worker under him. Mr. Duck thought a census taker ought to be able to write. He was mistaken; the chief qualification appears to have been to know how to vote.

My dear Mr. Bodine:

This will introduce to you Mr. Christopher Ronschusen, 3003 Normal Avenue.

I understand that there is a vacancy for Enumerator in the ward, and anything that can be done for Mr. Ronschusen will be appreciated by me.

Evidently George J. Feser, committeeman from the Fourth Ward, was not persona grata with the administration as his letter seems never to have reached Mr. Volz.

Chicago.

Dear Mr. Bodine:

The Chinese boy in the 1st ward says that he received no notification. His name is [illegible], 237 W. 22nd St. If you need an extra supervisor, allow me to recommend Victor B. Wahlstrom, 5410 Fulton St., 33d ward.

Herewith a reserve list of applicants for positions as Census Enumerators, to be considered in the order given, this list to take precedence over all "extra" lists submitted heretofore. It is possible that one or two of these have been notified and are working, but I have no record of it.

Very respectfully,

Like all good generals, Mr. Volz stood ready to fill all vacancies on the census firing line. He sent in many formidable lists of "reserve" names, one of which appears above. In this instance Mr. Volz's signature was torn from the bottom, but the written notations on the page identify it as that of Mr. Lundin's secretary.

Address

Mr. Bodine,

Chicago.

Dear Sir:

The bearer, Mr. A. E. Anderson, whom I overlooked and forgot to get him taking census, is there any possible way you can work him in? If so, the same would be highly appreciated, as he is one of our workers up there and justly entitled to it, and I know you will put him in if it is possible.

Thanking you in advance for same, I beg to remain

Yours very truly,
Andrew McAnsh

Mr. McAnsh sent in a hurry call on March 30 for A. E. Anderson. In the press of census letter-writing and the aldermanic campaign work the Twenty-fifth ward boss had quite forgotten him.

Sir;

Mrs. Dorothy Kirby of 7625 S. Sangamon St., has applied to me for a position as enumerator in this ward. I am personally interested in Mrs. Kirby as is Mr. Chas. A. Williams, Committeeman, and if consistent it is respectfully requested that her application be given favorable consideration.

Edith M. Dick writes a note to Mr. Bodine asking for a place for Mrs. Dorothy Kirby, stating that Charles A. Williams is interested in her as is the writer. The letter does not show whether or not the committeeman's pull was strong enough to land the job.

Dear Sir:-

If possible I would like you to appoint Lillie K. Perkins, 2035 N. Leavitt Street as a census taker.

Mrs. Perkins is a widow with two small children depending upon her. If you can put her to work I will greatly appreciate it.

Yours very truly,

Frank Paschen, democratic, thought the widow and orphan plea was good among the educators, but he didn't know the system—orphans don't vote.

MORTGAGE HELD UP FOR SOLDIER

The soldiers' and sailors' civil rights bill was given a trial in Judge Windes' court yesterday when the judge decided that Benjamin Kulp, vice president of the Kedzie State bank, could not foreclose on a $16,000 mortgage held on the property of Private David W. Newton. Newton came all the way back from Camp Fremont, Cal., to defend his rights.

Private Newton's property is located at Franklin boulevard and Homan avenue and is said to be worth $35,000. The foreclosure was for nonpayment of interest. Judge Windes decided that no further action could be taken by the holder of the mortgage until three months after the termination of Newton's military service. Harold J. Coleman, who proffered his services free of charge as a patriotic measure, was appointed receiver.

Newton, who was drafted on May 1 on seventeen hours' notice, says he did not have time before leaving for the army to arrange for the payment of the interest.

MEN OF CENSUS EXPOSE ARE 'OUT' OR ODDLY SILENT

Volz Refuses to Talk and Others Offer No Light.

It was strange how many of the persons implicated in some way in the school census expose were reported "out of town" yesterday. There was scarcely any one left in Chicago to whom the buck might be passed.

"Ike" Volz, secretary to Fred Lundin, whose O. K. was on most of the census enumerators, was in Chicago, but decided not to talk.

"I won't say a word about the school census," he said, "but if this thing goes on people will imagine I'm as big a man as Fred Lundin. Just at present I am engaged in assisting the candidacy of Mayor Thompson for United States senator."

William Lester Bodine, nominally the census chief, who put his O. K. upon the candidates for positions turned in by Volz and other city hall political workers, was taking a vacation in McHenry county, not far from the summer homes of Lundin, President Davis, and others in the Lundin organization. He could not be reached.

Another absentee was Superintendent John D. Shoop, who is head of the educational department, in which Mr. Bodine is an assistant. Mr. Shoop left the city on Thursday for a cruise on the lakes. He is expected back tomorrow or Tuesday.

President Davis also was absent. It was said he left Chicago on Friday. There was no one about the board rooms yesterday who would talk. George Keith, chief assistant to Mr. Bodine in the census work, held a conference with Secretary Albert H. Miller, who is to take the next census, but neither was willing to do any talking for publication.

Eugene R. Pike, city controller, one of those who succeeded in getting his man on the list of enumerators, said he was merely doing a favor for Ralph C. Otis, who was then a school trustee.

"Mr. Otis asked me if I couldn't recommend a few men for the census," said Mr. Pike.

James Lester Monaghan, who belonged to the old Lorimer machine, said his jest about "We Lesters must together sticken" was not sufficient to get his man a job.

Mayor Thompson, who was active with Lundin in a spirited aldermanic contest about the time the census was taken, was "not in."

$150,000 SUIT DUE TO HOOSIER ELECTION FIGHT

An aftermath of the Indianapolis mayoralty election of 1917 came yesterday in the form of a suit for $150,000 damages filed in the federal court here by Charles L. Hutchinson, a real estate man of the Indiana capitol, against Delavan Smith, publisher of the Indianapolis News and a resident of Lake Forest.

In the election Hutchinson was a supporter of Samuel Lewis Shank, former mayor, who was a candidate in the Republican primaries against Charles W. Jewett, now mayor, who ran as an independent on the "Home Rule" party ticket. After the primaries charges were made by Shank, based on an investigation made by Hutchinson and others, that Jewett's nomination had been brought about through ballot box stuffing.

In his suit Hutchinson claims the grand jury inquiry into the alleged election frauds was illegally conducted.

PLAN WELCOME FOR SANTA MARIA

The flags of the United States and Spain will be raised from the deck of the Santa Maria in the Jackson park harbor this afternoon in welcoming home the wayward Columbus caravel, which has long rested in a harbor in the St. Lawrence river and returned through negotiations with the Canadian government.

The Spanish flag will be the largest of that nation ever raised in Chicago. It was made by Miss Isabel Harris, a direct descendant of Betsy Ross, and will become the property of the Chicago Historical society. The two flags will be raised by Irene McAvoy and Ethel Benson, representing respectively Columbia and Miss Chicago.

Judge Charles N. Goodnow will be chairman of the exercises, which start at 3 o'clock. The speakers will be P. J. Reynolds, state president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and John J. Poulton. Berthold Singer, consul for Spain in Chicago, will be present.

CZARNECKI ASKS HOYNE TO STOP SCHOOL CENSUS

Minority Trustee Says 'Solid Six' Action Is Waste.

In a letter to State's Attorney Maclay Hoyne yesterday Anthony Czarnecki, one of the minority members of the board of education, appealed to the state's attorney to prevent the taking of the proposed census by the "solid six."

Mr. Czarnecki pointed out that the time for reporting the minor population had expired July 15, and that the law states that when a school district fails to make its returns in the manner and by the time specified it forfeits its share of the state distribution fund, which in the case of the Chicago board is approximately $1,500,000.

Calls Plan a Waste.

"Under the plan which is to be carried out, unless stopped by court action," wrote Mr. Czarnecki, "the expenditure of money will be largely a waste, and the taking of the census will not be for the purpose of determining the proportion of the state fund which should be alloted to the board of education. It appears to me that it can be of service only for the report to be made on or before July 15 of next year.

"There is no legal reason or necessity for taking up the census at this time, in view of the pending litigation in the Supreme court regarding the right of the city council to reconsider the confirmation of nine of the eleven members of the present board.

"For years the taking of the school census has been conducted largely by political or personal appointees of those controlling the school board to an extent which frequently resulted in scandal.

Follows Old System.

"The majority of the school board proceeded to arrange for the census along the old lines, placing its supervision in the hands of the secretary of the board, Albert H. Miller, instead of in the hands of the educational department. The majority insists the work should be done prior to Sept. 11."

Mr. Czarnecki mentioned his plan to have the teachers take the census during the early part of the summer vacation, but he said the school board majority refused to accept his proposal. He said that the appropriation of $60,000 is more than has ever previously been made for the taking of a minor population census in Chicago.

KAISER BEGINS PLUNDER OF HIS VASSAL, FINLAND

Czecho - Slovaks Alone Confront Hun Advance in the East.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—Finland is made Germany's vassal by the terms of the German-Finnish treaty, according to the Swedish press, extracts from which were received here today. The arrangement with Finland is merely a link, however, in Germany's scheme for mastering and exploiting Russia. A report made public here today says:

"There can be no doubt of Germany's aspiration to control the Russian market and exploit Russian resources.

Medium of Trade.

"In other words, interior Russia will thus be forced to trade with the outside world through Germany or through German controlled states, the former Russian provinces. At the same time, German enterprise will not only exploit these controlled states but also will see to the exploitation of interior Russia. Thus the whole former Russian empire, at least the European part of it, will be at the commercial mercy of Germany.

"German industrial exports will flood Russia and be pushed in every way, and Russia can only find an outlet for her natural riches through Germany or through former Russian provinces which will practically be German vassal states."

A dispatch to Le Journal in Paris says Duke Adolph Friedrich of Mecklenburg-Schwerin has accepted the Finnish crown offered by the landtag.

Czechs with Allies.

T. J. Masaryk, commander in chief of the Czecho-Slovak forces in Russia, in accordance with the plans of the allied supreme war council, has instructed the troops in Siberia to remain there for the present, according to a statement obtained from the Czecho-Slovak national council today.

These Czecho-Slovak contingents occupy "unparalleled" strategic positions, and realize, the statement asserts, that by remaining in Russia they will be enabled to render far greater service both to Russia and the allied cause than if they were transported to France. They have stretched out detachments toward the Murman coast, which is held by Anglo-French-American forces, and their activities make possible the reëstablishment of the eastern front.

Here Is Statement.

The statement follows:

"There have been so many promising campaigns started in Russia during the last year of which nothing more is heard, that the people in this country watch with a certain lack of confidence the successes of the Czecho-Slovak forces in Siberia and eastern European Russia.

"It is, of course, well known that the Czecho-Slovaks are not Russians, that they are a well organized and thoroughly disciplined force recruited from former Austrian soldiers of the Bohemian and Slovak races who surrendered to the Russians. The Czecho-Slovak army in Russia was created in order to fight the Germans and the Austrians.

Trotzky Tries to Disarm Them.

"Under pressure of Austrian and German demands, Trotzky tried to disarm the Czecho-Slovaks and put them in prison camps with a view of turning them over to Austrian authorities. The Czecho-Slovaks, being attacked, had to defend themselves, and as a result found themselves in control of the greatest portion of the trans-Siberian railroad and the Volga river.

"No doubt the Czecho-Slovak boys in Russia are anxious to avoid participation in a possible civil war in Russia, but they realize at the same time that by staying where they are they may be able to render far greater service both to Russia and the allied cause than if they were transported to France. They are at the orders of the supreme war council of the allies."

GERMAN-RUSS FOOD CRISIS.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—The food situation between Germany and Russia has reached an acute stage, according to reports received today at the state department. There is not enough food for both countries and the question as to who will get what provisions there are has reached a critical stage.

High handed methods have been adopted by the Germans, it is said.

GRANT FIGHTERS SNIFF AT DEATH IN GAS DRILLS

Begin Tests That Are to Eliminate Fear of German Weapon.

Camp Grant, Ill., July 27.—[Special.]—Fighting men of the Blackhawk division entered today upon a series of training drills which will make the gas mask as familiar a part of the combat equipment as the rifle. Both seasoned men and recruits are included in a sweeping order designed to eliminate entirely the fear of the deadly German weapon and to make protection against gas second nature to officers and men. Companies, regiments, and brigades, irrespective of experience in gas drills, began a march in the divisional gas chamber this afternoon. They began their new training with preliminary drills in which every man was compelled to adjust his mask within six seconds after the danger signal before he could proceed with the program.

Through Deadly Fumes.

With masks adjusted the fighting men were then marched through the gas chamber where deadly fumes meant death to the unprotected. They found that, although the hot masks were far from comfortable, the poison lost all of its terrors for the men behind the breathing tube.

The next step consisted in a first hand introduction to weakened forms of German gas. Raising the masks slightly, the men were allowed to sniff chlorine, phosgene, and mustard gas momentarily in order to become acquainted with the creeping death. Few men cared to take more than one whiff, and they will be able to recognize the danger upon its first appearance in the trenches.

Wear Mask for Hours.

Races, rifle sighting, and other strenuous drills followed to accustom the men to the mask during the hardest physical exercise. Later they will occupy the trench area, wearing the gas protector for hours at a time. Reports show that it is sometimes necessary to wear the masks for as long as twenty-four hours and that it is becoming increasingly difficult to maintain protective discipline among the American expeditionary forces. The entire division will complete the new series of gas training during the month to come.

Candidates of the fourth officers' training camp led the van in the newly organized Saturday training. Commanded entirely by student officers, battalions of the camp held a stirring review on the central maneuvering field and completed the difficult formations with a snap and precision which brought warm praise from veteran officers.

Perfect Food Economy.

Food economy for division and camp reached a new plane of efficiency when a system of centralized buying for mess extras was put into effect

The lot of military slackers was made decidedly less agreeable with the christening of a new colony in the base hospital area, where objectors hereafter will be held in distinct isolation from all fighting men. Until disposal of the various cases, the objectors will live in the segregated tent colony and will perform all of their own work, coming into contact with men in camp only in fatigue duties. The new tent area has been dubbed "leper colony" by soldiers.

Chicagoans Promoted.

Promotions in the Three Hundred and Eleventh engineers were announced today as follows:

Maj. M. O. Kasson, Chicago, to be lieutenant colonel.

Capt. Edward J. Blair, Oak Park, to be major.

First Lieuts. Chester M. Mackenzie, Evanston; Fred B. Whipperman, and William M. Winkler of Oak Park, to be captains.

Second Lieuts. Fred Beerman, F. A. Rohn, H. S. Barber, M. S. Stone, J. A. Russell, F. J. Sherwin to be first lieutenants.

3 NEW CAMPS TO BE BUILT AT ONCE AT GREAT LAKES

Extension Plans for the Station Comprise Big Buildings.

Great Lakes, Ill., July 27.—[Special.]—Contracts for the construction of three new camps at the station will be let almost immediately. Announcement of this enlargement of the Great Lakes Naval Training station was made today by Chief Engineer W. H. Allen, public works officer. He returned from Washington yesterday after a conference with the bureau of yards and docks. Work on the camps will begin about Aug. 10 and will be completed in about sixty days.

One of the features of the camps will be the centralization of the various departments of each regiment into the "H" shaped buildings. Each regiment will have an executive building which will contain, besides the offices of the various regimental officers, a postoffice, shoe shop, barber shop, and tailor shop.

Plan to Save Time.

The centralization plan of building was adopted by the authorities mainly to save time, heat, roads, and building space.

In addition to the main "H" buildings, there will be six similar buildings for barracks in each camp. There will be one immense mess hall for each unit. These will be 484 feet long and 114 feet wide. They will contain fourteen large mess rooms, twelve for enlisted men, one for the maintenance forces and one for chief petty officers. Service will be on the cafeteria plan. One galley will prepare the food.

Two Big Drill Halls.

STORM CAUSES HEAVY LOSSES AT CAMP CUSTER

Camp Custer, Mich., July 27.—[Special.]—Camp Custer sustained heavy losses from rain, wind, and lightning last night and early today. Two heating plants were set on fire, the camp laundry flooded, the cement pavement inundated, gravel roads and the camp railroad yards badly damaged by washouts, and the newly finished grain elevators saved from collapse only by soldiers working all night with hay and sandbags diverting the torrents that descended from nearby hills.

Real training for the July draft men will start at Camp Custer Monday. It will not be quite as intensive as that to which the Eighty-fifth division was subjected before its departure, as Col. Charles Pain, now commanding the camp, has authorized a resumption of Wednesday and Saturday half holidays.

Most of the 12,000 men in the July draft have already arrived. The percentage of rejections among the new selects is rising, but will probably be no higher than with previous drafts. Over 800 men have been discharged and sent home as physically unfit out of the first 6,250 men examined. Bad teeth and heart weaknesses are the chief causes.

BINGHAM PAID $5,000,000 FROM WIFE'S ESTATE

Louisville, Ky., July 27.—Reports published here today are to the effect that R. W. Bingham of Louisville, in New York today was paid a legacy of $5,000,000 from the estate of his wife, formerly Mrs. Henry M. Flagler, who died in this city about a year ago.

Coupled with the report was a published statement that Mr. Bingham had purchased the Louisville Times and Courier Journal, allied properties.

W. B. Haldeman, chairman of the executive committee of the corporations owning the papers, said Mr. Bingham had an option on them.

It was rumored that Henry Watterson would retire as editor of the Courier-Journal, but no confirmation could be obtained.

LANSING MAYOR APOLOGIZES TO CRITICIZED COURT

Detroit, Mich., July 27.—[Special.]—Mayor Jacob Ferle of Lansing has made a formal apology to Judge Arthur J. Tuttle of the United States District court and has thereby won immunity from contempt of court action.

The mayor came to Detroit upon demand of United States District Attorney Kinnane, who had been besieged by telegrams from Lansing citizens demanding that action be taken against Mayor Ferle for criticizing Judge Tuttle's action in sending William Powell, convicted of seditious utterances, to prison for twenty years and fining him $10,000.

'LABOR' AGENCY NETS $100,000, VIERECK CHARGE

Was Paid by Pro-Germans to Obtain Jobs for Alien Enemies.

New York, July 27.—Evidence that George Sylvester Viereck obtained $100,000 for his own uses from pro-Germans, who believed they were contributing to improve the status of enemy aliens, has been obtained through examination of witnesses and of his bank accounts, it was announced today at the office of Merton E. Lewis, state's attorney general. About half this sum was invested in German war bonds and municipal securities.

After America entered the war and Viereck changed the name of his publication, the Fatherland, to Viereck's Weekly his source of revenue, which was the German government, was cut off. To carry on his alleged German activities, it was charged by Alfred L. Becker, deputy attorney general, he employed agents to collect funds under the representation that the money was to be used to finance the agricultural and industrial labor relief bureau which he said was organized to aid unemployed enemy aliens.

Agents Called as Witnesses.

These agents, called as witnesses, told of their work in all parts of the country and of obtaining sums ranging from $5 to $800.

According to Mr. Becker, the evidence indicated that Viereck paid himself a salary of $700 monthly and that the labor organization placed $400 or $500 worth of advertising in Viereck's Weekly each week. In these two ways, Mr. Becker declared, Viereck apparently obtained personal possession of virtually all the contributions.

Transcripts of his bank accounts are said to show he purchased, through Hugo Schmidt, German war bonds and Berlin elevated and subway bonds. It was Schmidt, now interned, who acted as agent for the German government in placing millions of dollars in American banks to the credit of former Ambassador von Bernstorff in connection with the Bolo Pasha case.

Launching of Fatherland.

Incidentally, Mr. Becker declared, it has been discovered that when the Fatherland was launched, just after the European war began, Count von Bernstorff was the first contributor, placing $1,000 in Viereck's hands. Between that time and America's entry into the war, the German government financed the weekly to the extent of $100,000, Mr. Becker said the evidence shows.

Desired to Aid U. S., Viereck Says.

Viereck was examined regarding the labor organization he operated. He testified that when America entered the war he desired to aid this country. At first he thought of "entering a munitions plant," but decided he could better realize his ambition by helping to solve America's labor problem by placing on farms and in industries enemy aliens thrown out of employment elsewhere.

In his testimony Viereck is said to have conceded that his agents raised $60,000 "or a little more." He claimed he succeeded in furnishing employment for 5,000 persons, 80 or 90 per cent being Germans, and the others "Englishmen, Frenchmen, and Chinamen." According to testimony by other witnesses the number of aliens given work was not great because "we rarely had people who wanted the jobs." Agents testified that the money they turned over to Viereck after holding out their own commissions, which generally amounted to 40 per cent, was paid in bills and never in checks.

Contributions Dwindle.

While the labor bureau exists today, Mr. Becker said, with its advertising appearing in the current issue of Viereck's Weekly, the contributions have dwindled for the reason that the agents have been too timid to continue soliciting in view of the hostility in America against things German.

Mr. Becker today examined Louis J. Hammerling, who handled neutrality advertising through foreign language newspapers in this country prior to America entering the war. The results of this phase of the inquiry were not made public.

Dr. William Bayard Hale, in a statement issued from his summer home at Ashland, N. H., tonight denied he had edited the speech attempting to justify the sinking of the Lusitania, delivered by Dr. Dernburg in Cleveland.

'MEET AFTER-WAR CONDITIONS BY RURAL FACTORY'

McChord Calls Small Town Best Medium of Readjustment.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—[Special.]—Back to the country town should be the trend of industrial reconstruction after the war, according to Interstate Commerce Commissioner McChord, who in an interview today unqualifiedly indorsed THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE's advocacy of immediate preparation for the readjustment of conditions of national life which will be made necessary upon the conclusion of peace.

Commissioner McChord said railroad discriminations and other forces have abnormally developed Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh as manufacturing centers, but that with government control of the railways, terminating harmful competition, there is now no reason why rate inequalities should not be removed and an industrial decentralization organized, which will revive manufacturing in small cities and create better living conditions for the workers.

"Costs Less in Country."

"There are many considerations that dictate a relocation of our manufacturing industries," Mr. McChord said. "In the first place, it costs more to do business in a city than in the country.

"Land values and costs of construction of plants, taxes, etc., constitute charges that must be met from earnings. It costs more to live in a city than in the country.

"A lower wage payment in the country than in the city would enable the workman to secure more comforts of life, to clothe his family better and educate them more adequately. If the factory is located near the raw product there is saving in transportation costs which will be reflected in net earnings.

"Scatter the Factories."

"If wage scales are to be readjusted downward to meet conditions in times of peace the wider diffusion of factories presents an alluring way out. What the workman desires, and what he has the right to demand, is opportunity to live in comfort. In almost any country town of 1,500 or more population that might be named in the middle west or the south there is opportunity to live better and enjoy more of the real comforts of life at materially lower wages than even an approach to the same state of livelihood can be secured in any congested manufacturing center.

"Thoughtful study should now be given to the equalization of rates for freight transportation, and as to whether higher rates should for the future be permitted for shorter than for longer distances over the same line or route."

"Transportation by boat on our rivers and coast lines should be encouraged."

U. S. TO COLLECT ITS WAR TAX AT SPEEDWAY GATE

Failure to pay $3,200 war taxes on tickets sold for the Speedway auto races on June 22 resulted in officials of the association being called to the federal building yesterday and nearly caused a hitch in today's races.

The nonappearance of the tax money at the federal building was called to District Attorney C. F. Clyne's attention early in the day by D. J. Mahany of Collector Smietanka's office. Assistant District Attorney Ben Epstein was put on the association's trail. Officials of the association protested that they had been led to believe that Promoter Weldman had turned over the tax money. They were informed that such was not the case and that the association itself was liable.

The result of the conference was that the internal revenue department will have a man at the Speedway turnstiles today and back taxes are to be paid by the end of the month.

AUSTRIAN EAGLES START MINIATURE WAR IN THE LOOP

Peace Comes When Flags Hide Emblem at Cafe; Four Arrested.

An Austrian eagle or two, chiseled in the stone façade over the entrance to Vogelsang's restaurant, became active in the war yesterday. A crowd of citizens and jackies, incited, it is alleged, by dissatisfied waiters, evoked something approaching a riot in Madison street.

Following the rumpus three officials of the waiters' union and Clifton Peterson of 1754 North Whipple street, a former soldier, were arrested and accused of arousing the disturbance. Ben F. Parker of 2345 Park avenue, head of local No. 7, Chicago Waiters' association; Herbert Gould of 5026 Calumet avenue, business agent, and Fred M. Peabody of 214 North State street, business agent of the cooks' union, were the others. All were released on bond.

Blames Union Waiters.

The affair is declared by John Z. Vogelsang, owner of the restaurant and president of the Restaurant Keepers' association, to have started when Parker and his associates demanded a settlement of the waiters' strike in the Café Royale. Mr. Vogelsang refused to treat with the men as union officials, but said an individual settlement could readily be reached.

"Then," said Vogelsang, "they went out in front and drew the attention of the crowd to the eagles that were sculptured in the façade eighteen years ago. Naturally it was easy to stir up trouble in such times as these.

"The decorations have nothing to do with my patriotism. My only son was in the service two days after war was declared, and he is now a first lieutenant in Camp Grant.

Eagles Will Fall.

"The decorations were hardly visible, because I have kept the front of the restaurant covered with the national colors and the national food pledge. But I am going to have them chiseled down now."

Parker and his companions deny starting the trouble. But, nevertheless, a great shout arose and cries of "tear 'em down," came from the citizens and jackies who filled the street.

Edward Friedman, a jackie recruit speaker, mounted a box and made a plea for order. He called particularly upon his mates to leave the matter to the federal agents, and urged them to have no part in a street brawl. His talk was greeted with cheers.

Flag Stops Trouble.

While the murmurings of the crowd were still loud and menacing, Mr. Vogelsang appeared with several American flags. These were taken by Albert Phende, also a jackie, who mounted a ladder and draped the offending eagles, effectually hiding them from view. The crowd broke into a good humored laugh and moved away.

After quiet had been restored Mr. Vogelsang went to the central station and took out warrants for the four men later arrested. It is said that federal agents would investigate their activities.

Lynch Negro Accused of Attempt to Attack Girl

Groesbeck, Texas, July 27.—Jim Brown, a Negro, was lynched today by a crowd of about 200 men, near Ben Hur, a small place near Groesbeck, for an alleged attempted attack on a young woman at Ben Hur last night.

TWO CAPTURED TRYING TO BLOW WAR PLANTS UP

Light Fuse, Turn to Flee, Face Drawn Revolvers.

New York, July 27.—[Special.]—Two men were captured today in the act of blowing up two war plants in Irvington, N. J. Both pleaded guilty to charges of sabotage and were held in $20,000 bail. Another man, arrested as a friend of one of the alleged plotters, was held in $10,000 bail on a charge of conspiring to violate the espionage act.

Those under arrest are Frederick W. Bischoff of Irvington, a chemist and dentist, formerly proprietor of the American Ivory Novelty company of Irvington; William Heineman, also known as Heinemeyer, of Irvington, and Bruno Reichelt, a patent lawyer, with offices on Broad street, Newark.

Both German Born.

Bischoff and Heineman, the men arrested in the alleged attempt to blow up the war plants, are German born. Reichelt pleaded not guilty to conspiring.

According to federal agents, the bomb plot was discovered through an investigation of the activities of Bischoff and Reichelt. The agents learned that an attempt would be made to blow up the plant of Gould & Eberhardt and the Keyport Engineering company, in Irvington, both working on munitions.

Delay in Blast.

The plotters intended to blow up the factories on Thursday night, according to the detectives, but this was changed to Friday night because Bischoff wanted to change the fuse. Just before midnight Friday the officers piled into two autos and went to the plants marked for destruction. They adjoin each other, a railroad track running between the Gould and Eberhardt power house and the Keyport powder magazine.

The men hid around the yard and waited until early yesterday morning for the suspects to arrive. They finally did appear and the watchers saw them walk stealthily along the yard to a point near the power house. One of them drew out a bomb. The fuse was lighted by Heineman, as he afterward admitted, and placed on the ground against the power house wall. As the two turned to run they found themselves surrounded by men with drawn revolvers.

COUPLE LASHED TOGETHER FOUND IN MAINE HARBOR

Bar Harbor, Me., July 27.—The bodies of a man and a woman, lashed together with rope, were picked up in the harbor today by a patrol boat of the naval coast patrol reserve. They were found floating 100 yards below the breakwater. An examination of the clothing by the manager of a local hotel indicated that the bodies were those of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Morse of Boston. Mr. Morse and his wife were guests at the hotel on July 8 and left a few days later for another summer resort.

VIENNA EMPIRE KEY TO TYRANNY, SERB ENVOY SAYS

Free Racial States Alone Will Bring Justice, Speaker Says.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—The future peace of the world can be assured only by the dismemberment of Austria-Hungary and the establishment of the free states of the Czecho-Slovaks, the Poles, and the Jugo-Slavs. L. Michailovitch, Serbian minister to the United States, so declared tonight in a statement discussing the causes leading up to and the issues of the world war, which will enter upon its fifth year tomorrow.

Establishment of the free states, the minister said, will destroy the German scheme for extension both to Persia and across Russia. So long as the dual monarchy exists in its present form, he added, the roads to Bagdad and Vladivostok will remain open.

Plan for Hun World.

"In her great plan for the domination of the world," continued Mr. Michailovitch, "Germany had for her principal ally Austria-Hungary. Aided by that empire and across its territory Germany's influence was to have spread over the Balkans and the Ottoman empire to the Persian gulf. The existence and reinforcing of Austria-Hungary was essential for the realization of this plan, which was menaced by a number of dangers, dangers which even threatened the very existence of the dual monarchy.

"There was, in the first place, the development and progress of Serbia, which, on account of identity of race and its very democratic constitution, became a point of attraction for all the Jugo-Slavs. The second danger was the ever growing resistance of the Jugo-Slavs, Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes to the Austro-Hungarian régime. Finally there was the powerful national organization of the Czecho-Slovak people, which had always awaited a favorable occasion to settle its accounts with the Hapsburgs and their supporters.

"An independent Serbia was a barrier against the expansion of Germany towards the east. To save Austria and open the route to the east Germany had but one means—war."

200 GOING TO FRONT.

Today is the fourth anniversary of the day upon which Serbia rejected the Austrian ultimatum which brought about the war, wherefore the event is to be celebrated generally throughout the United States as Serbian day. One of the near local features will be the departure for the front of 300 young Serbians from Clinton, Ill. John Palandeck, editor of the Balkan World, will bid them farewell.

HAYS IS COMING HERE TO SIZE UP SENATE CONTEST

Wilson's O. K. to Lewis Gives Concern to Republican Chief.

Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, is coming to Chicago this week to consider particularly the Illinois senatorial situation. The personal indorsement given to the candidacy of Senator Lewis by President Wilson and the action of the Democratic state committee led by Roger C. Sullivan in giving its o. k. to Senator Lewis apparently have resulted in making the Illinois senatorship the top lined feature of the fall campaign.

Chairman Hays will meet Congressman Medill McCormick tomorrow. Later he is to talk to others who are interested in the Illinois senatorial campaign and probably with spokesmen who are authorized to represent Congressman George E. Foss and National Committeeman William Hale Thompson. In spite of any argument that may be offered, it seems to be improbable that either Foss or McCormick will withdraw as a candidate in the September primaries.

Mayor to Stick, Too.

That the mayor will continue as a candidate seems to be a foregone conclusion. The political suggestion yesterday was that the mayor would refuse to consider any proposal looking toward his own withdrawal until the point has been reached that he cannot be renominated in April as the Republican candidate for mayor.

Other conditions affecting the Mississippi valley states also are to be taken up by Chairman Hays while he is in Chicago, and important announcements concerning the conduct of the 1918 congressional campaign and as preliminary to the 1920 presidential situation are to be considered at conferences to be held during the week.

Anti-Sullivans for Lewis.

Senator Lewis was indorsed unanimously for renomination by the anti-Sullivan caucus that is making the county slate that is to be opposed to the primary ticket of the Sullivan opposition. Two candidates for congressmen-at-large are to be slated, one of whom, probably, will be Lawrence B. Stringer of Lincoln, who was a candidate for the primary nomination for United States senator against Roger C. Sullivan in 1914. The other is to be a Chicago man. Former Alderman John Downey is the slate candidate for state treasurer, running against James J. Brady, who carries the indorsement of the regulars. Former State Senator Michael F. Cleary of Galena, the dry leader in the state senate during Gov. Dunne's term, filed his petition yesterday as a candidate for congressman-at-large.

Lindheimer Out of Game.

Assistant County Treasurer Jacob Lindheimer yesterday issued a formal statement to the effect that he is out of politics, following the slate-making disturbance that followed the failure of the regulars to name him for county treasurer or for the board of review for the Ryan vacancy, and the subsequent failure of the anti-Sullivan faction to slate him for anything.

"Yesterday some of the opposition leaders asked me to accept a place on their ticket," says a statement from Mr. Lindheimer, referring to the anti-Sullivan caucus leaders. William L. O'Connell, speaking for the insurgents, said that any suggestions as to slating Lindheimer on their ticket had come from Lindheimer's friends and that the proposition had not been conceived at Hotel Morrison headquarters of the anti-Sullivan forces, inasmuch as their ticket had been completed at the time that Lindheimer had been turned down by the regulars, and that no political reason was found, after prolonged discussion, to make over the earlier slate.

Rivals Back Sterling.

Two of the candidates for the Republican nomination for state treasurer at the 1916 primaries have come out for Fred E. Sterling of Rockford, who is the chairman of the Republican state committee, and who filed his petition at Springfield on the first day of filing. Alexander L. Metzel of Elgin and John J. Stowe of Girard, who contested the 1916 nomination with Treasurer Len Small, have become openly aligned with the Sterling candidacy.

Congressman William B. McKinley of Champaign filed his petition as a Republican candidate for renomination in the Nineteenth district. He is to have no opposition whatever, according to all reports from his district. State Senator Peter E. Coleman of La Salle filed his petition as a Democrat for renomination to the state senate from the La Salle county district, and William F. McNamara of La Salle filed as a candidate for Democratic state committeeman from the Twelfth congressional district. John P. Driscoll, Republican, of Peoria filed as a candidate for the Illinois house from the Eighteenth district.

IN POLITICS

Numerous Meetings Arranged in Behalf of Various Candidates.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for the organization of a league of real estate brokers and owners to further the candidacy of Perkins B. Bass as a member of the board of review, and Charles Ringer, to succeed himself on the board of assessors. At a recent meeting it was decided to send out a call to real estate owners, brokers, and agents to attend a massmeeting luncheon on Wednesday or Thursday at a downtown hotel. This is being undertaken by the real estate interests in order that they may be represented by men on the two boards familiar with real estate conditions.

William H. Malone, candidate for the Republican nomination for congress in the Seventh district, will formally open his speaking campaign tomorrow night at a meeting at the headquarters at 2059 West Lake street. Other speakers will be John Grunau, candidate for representative in the Twenty-first senatorial district; Al H. Mack, candidate for county commissioner, and Emil J. Wentzlaff, candidate for Republican state central committeeman.

Fletcher Dobyns, opening his campaign for the Republican nomination for congress in the Ninth district—the north side territory—proposes to set forth a chapter by chapter record of Congressman Fred A. Britten's career at Washington, according to announcement made by Mr. Dobyns yesterday. Chapter one, Mr. Dobyns said, will be developed at Belmont hall Tuesday night. Charles J. O'Connor is to preside. Felix Streyckmans, Charles W. Folds, and Mr. Dobyns will be the speakers. Chapter two is to be offered at Yondorf's hall in the Twenty-second ward Thursday night, and a later meeting will be held at North Side Turner hall in the Twenty-first ward.

Republicans of the Second ward will meet Tuesday night at the headquarters of the McCormick-Brundage organization at 3440 South State street, to open the primary campaign in that section of Chicago. Among the speakers will be Assistant Attorney General Ben M. Thomas, who is likely to be on the regular organization slate for judge of the Municipal court.

There will be a "get together meeting" of the regular Thirty-third Ward Loyal Republican club at Republican headquarters, 4255 Armitage avenue, Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. All the candidates living on the northwest side carrying the McCormick-Brundage loyalty banner have been invited to attend. Le Roy Millner, candidate for Probate clerk; William H. Malone, candidate for congress; Paul F. Schaefer and Emil Jenisch, candidates for county commissioner; Irwin R. Hazen, candidate for Municipal court judge, and other good speakers will be present.

Chicago Woman's Tip Aids Recovery of Stolen Silks

St. Louis, Mo., July 27.—[Special.]—Chief of Detectives Hannegan today received a tip from a woman in Chicago who directed him to 2841 St. Vincent avenue, St. Louis, where more than $11,000 worth of silks stolen from a local concern was recovered and eleven persons were arrested.

The silks were hidden under tarpaulins in a garage. Louis Perkal and his wife Minnie, owners of the place, claim that they rented the garage to strangers. The strangers were arrested when they arrived with a big truck to transfer the silk.

Though a reward of $2,000 was offered for the recovery of the silk, Chief Hannegan refused to accept it.

SENATOR SMITH WITHDRAWS IN MICHIGAN RACE

Helme Entrance in Democratic Contest Adds to Ford's Troubles.

Lansing, Mich., July 27.—[Special.]—United States Senator William Alden Smith of Grand Rapids, who qualified for a place on the primary ballot as a candidate for renomination, withdrew from the race Saturday afternoon a few minutes before the time for filing nomination petitions expired, leaving the field to Truman H. Newberry, Henry Ford, William Gerald Simpson, and Chase S. Osborn.

With the exception of ex-Governor Osborn, the candidates for the Republican nomination for United States senator are all residents of Detroit.

Elect Patriot, Smith Urges.

After making known his decision to withdraw Senator Smith sent a letter to the citizens' committee of Grand Rapids in which he said:

"My service in the senate has been most enjoyable, but I am anxious to be relieved of this responsibility, and have made all arrangements to retire on March 4 next.

"I am very anxious to be succeeded in the senate by a patriot and a Republican and confidently look forward to this result. I am willing to aid in bringing it about."

While Senator Smith's withdrawal from the Republican race simplifies matters in the G. O. P. camp to some extent, the troubles of the Democrats were multiplied considerably when James W. Helme of Adrian filed sufficient petitions to place his name on the Democratic ballot in opposition to Henry Ford for the Democratic nomination for United States senator.

Dent in Ford Chances.

Helme's entry into the race puts a dent in the carefully conceived plans of Democratic National Committeeman William L. Connolly to nominate Ford on both Republican and Democratic tickets. With Helme as a formidable candidate for the senatorial nomination, it is not believed that many Democrats will ask for Republican ballots in the primary for the sole purpose of making Ford the Republican candidate.

Connolly and other organization Democrats want Ford as their senatorial candidate. Helme, who is a leader in the state grange and a power among the farmers of the state, has not been on friendly terms with many of the leaders in the Democratic party for years, and it is predicted that a determined fight will be put up to prevent him from snatching the nomination from Ford.

Osborn and Newberry Gainers.

With Senator Smith out of the race, Republican leaders generally believe Ford's chances of grabbing off the Republican nomination have suffered a severe blow.

Had Senator Smith never issued a statement announcing his retirement, it is claimed that he would have been a formidable candidate, but when he withdrew a few months ago, many of his supporters went into the Osborn and Newberry camp.

VOTE TO CRUSH MONEY MACHINE, THOMPSON CRY

Mayor, in Elgin, Flails 'The Tribune' as a 'Trust Paper.'

Elgin, Ill., July 27.—[Special.]—Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago spoke to a large crowd here tonight in support of his candidacy for the Republican nomination for United States senator.

Mayor Thompson centered his attack on the so-called "trust press" and on what he termed the financial bondage inflicted on the people by arrogant wealth. According to the advance copy of his speech given out at headquarters in Chicago the mayor said:

"Tomorrow, the 28th day of July, will be the fiftieth anniversary of the day on which the secretary of state announced that the fourteenth amendment to the constitution had been adopted.

"That was the amendment which conferred citizenship upon the four million Negroes in bondage who had been, up to that time, treated as property.

Attacks Financial Bondage.

"Having thus rid our nation of the incubus of human bondage, let us celebrate this semi-centennial by taking our people out of financial bondage. The people can write their emancipation proclamation in the elections this fall if they desire to rid themselves of the undue and oppressive influence of arrogant wealth.

"The power and influence of concentrated wealth is manifested in many subterranean ways, one of the channels of operation being through the large metropolitan daily newspapers.

"Take, for instance, in our city of Chicago, the newspapers which can be relied upon to spread the propaganda of great wealth are THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE and the Daily News.

Slaps "Chicago Tribune."

"This accounts for the fact that THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE has one of THE TRIBUNE family running against me for the Republican nomination for United States senator, and may account for the fact that the Daily News is espousing the cause of another opponent.

"Messrs. Foss and McCormick vie with each other in proclaiming their support of the war, but they, together with Senator Lewis, are strangely silent when I ask them to tell the anxious mothers and fathers of the boys they voted to conscript and send "over there," why it was that they didn't also vote to conscript the wealth of the country to bear its fair share of the burden.

Casts Burden on Rich.

"For the information of you voters I desire tonight to invite attention to just one of the twenty-two planks of my platform, as follows:

"'I am in favor of adequate appropriations for the purpose of carrying on the war; but I insist that, as the people must bear the burden of these appropriations, care should be taken to guard against waste and extravagance. I will oppose the diversion of any portion of these funds to greedy profiteers.'"

DROWNS IN ATTEMPTING RESCUE.

Iowa Falls, Ia., July 27.—[Special.]—Francis Gates, aged 10, stepped off a ledge in the Iowa river today and was drowned. Charles A. Legge, the boy's Sunday school teacher, in attempting to rescue the lad, was also drowned.

TRIPLE TRIFLER IS JAILED AFTER 8 YEARS' CHASE

Social Worker Nemesis of Shipbuilder Who Weds Too Soon.

The "matrimonial ship" of Louis Albert Smith, which has weathered severe storms in the last eight years, came to anchor last night when he was pushed into a cell at the detective bureau.

He had been arrested on a warrant charging him with a violation of the Illinois law which prohibits remarriage within a year following a divorce.

Miss Sarah I. Roth, social and missionary worker, 838 West Adams street, who had played the rôle of detective for eight years, capped her long search by showing Smith a letter in which his wife No. 1 offered to allow him to get a divorce for $400. Smith, according to Miss Roth, obtained a divorce through fraud and in addition now has a second wife and a scorned fiancée to reckon with.

First Wife Old and Deaf.

Smith, according to Miss Roth, married his first wife in 1890 and deserted her in 1910. Mrs. Smith, without funds, was finally sent to Ontario, Cal., through the aid of Miss Roth, and is now being cared for by relatives. She is 71 years old and deaf. Smith is 59 years old.

When the case comes up in court tomorrow Mrs. Jeanette Wilson, living in Maryland, a scorned sweetheart, and the second wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Miller, 8623 Drexel avenue, will be present to tell the judge their opinions of Smith.

After Smith was arrested several times he begged his wife to let him off, promising to mend his ways and support her. In 1915 Miss Roth found him on the west side and told him she intended to cause his arrest.

Tears Win Sympathy.

Smith at the time is said to have told her he had heard his wife was dead. He cried so hard that the missionary worker, though often disappointed in her efforts to reform him, decided that he really was sincere and agreed to take him to his wife.

He met his wife at the Roth home, kissed her many times, then started out to collect his pay to start housekeeping. He was not heard of again until this spring, when Miss Roth learned he was working in a shipyard in South Chicago. In the meantime Mrs. Smith had gone to California.

On July 15 Mrs. Smith received a letter from Mrs. Wilson in which she told how Smith, who had won her affections and taken her money, had spurned her and had married Mrs. Miller after divorcing wife No. 1.

Consented to Divorce.

This divorce was obtained July 9 before Judge Guerin, and according to information obtained by Miss Roth, Smith charged his wife with desertion. Two witnesses told at the time of hearing Mrs. Smith say that she would allow her husband to get a divorce if he would pay her $300.

Two days before the divorce had been granted Miss Roth received a letter from Mrs. Smith in which she told of being tired of searching for her husband and said that if he would pay $400 toward her support she would not contest a divorce. Miss Roth tried to find Smith, but in the next few days he was said to be busy preparing his case and one hour after the divorce had been granted, according to a sister of his second wife, he was on his way to Kenosha, Wis., to remarry. The state of Wisconsin requires a residence of five days, so Smith and his bride went to Waukegan, Ill., where they were married.

Has Second Ceremony.

When the papers had been signed by the minister Smith noticed that Waukegan was in Illinois, and to avoid complications with the law, he hurried with his wife to Crown Point, Ind., where a second ceremony was performed.

Mrs. Smith No. 2 went to live at the Drexel avenue address, while her husband worked in Hammond. After Miss Roth learned that he would be in Chicago last night she went before State's Attorney Hoyne with her story. She was told to swear out the warrant before Judge Fisher, and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, in company with the detective sergeant, she arrived at the transfer point on Cottage Grove avenue and waited until Smith appeared.

When he had been safely placed under lock and key Miss Roth allowed him to read the letter from his wife in which she offered to allow him to get a divorce.

MEN BEFORE CREED

War Department Again Wants Chaplains, But of a Special Kind.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27.—[Special.]—The war department today sent out a call for army chaplains to meet the increased needs of the army.

A month ago the department announced that it had a thousand more applications for army chaplain commissions than it could possibly grant. A short time before that a statement had been issued deprecating reports that the army needed chaplains.

But the department now finds it needs chaplains and it wants a special kind of chaplain—one, the department says, "who cares a good deal more about the welfare of soldiers than about distinctions in creeds."

A school for chaplains is being conducted at Camp Zachary Taylor, near Louisville, where applicants are given a five weeks' course. Applicants are wanted now for the next class, which is to begin Aug. 23. A candidate, if a Protestant, must have the approval of the Federal Council of Churches in America; if a Roman Catholic, of the Catholic bureau for army and navy chaplains; if a Jew, of the Jewish welfare board.

MAYOR PATTON GIVES SELF UP IN $250,000 CASE

Burnham Executive Says He Knows Nothing of Car Thefts.

Mayor "Johnny" Patton of Burnham, for whom federal operatives vainly searched on Friday night to serve him with a warrant charging him with receiving part of the $250,000 loot alleged to have been stolen from freight cars in the Chicago district, surrendered himself in the federal building yesterday and was released on $3,000 cash bonds.

Patton appeared before United States Commissioner Mason accompanied by his attorney, Michael Igoe. The case was set for Aug. 6. The dapper young Burnham mayor declared he had been "on his farm" while the federal officers were hunting him and knew nothing of the warrant until he read of it in the newspapers.

He is accused of having received stolen goods which were part of the quarter of a million dollar haul gangs of freight car thieves have made recently. In all twenty-seven suspects have been arrested and are now in jail. Specifically the warrant charges his having had in his possession raincoats stolen from interstate shipments.

"There is nothing to the charges against me and I was not trying to get away," was the only comment Patton would make yesterday.

ALL TOLD, 'TWAS A HECTIC DAY ON THE RIALTO

Jail Yawns for Leading Man and Other Things Are Thrilling.

BY BOB LEE.

It seemed like Broadway along the Rialto yesterday and those who take a deep and anxious interest in the portentous affairs of the cafés and back stages just talked and carried the news and gossiped, and—well, gosh darn it, who wouldn't?

It was a constant whirl of Harriet Loraine jumping the show and Freeman Wood getting pinched on account of a girl with another show and somebody being sued for big sums with strings of cyphers like a comet, and detectives and hoosegows—

Take Freeman Wood, for instance. Leading man in the Cort theater. Detective sitting in the wings with manacles and what not. Do you suppose the thespian muse would operate smoothly under such circumstances? Neither did Freeman.

Wants Him as Husband.

Well, Mr. Wood was arrested on complaint of Miss Gladys Harrison of the Fernwood hotel, at 4052 Sheridan road. Miss Harrison is appearing in a musical production and she alleges Wood jilted her just when it seemed most necessary for him to accompany her to the parson's. Mr. Wood was not apprised of Miss Harrison's humor until Detective Sergeant Herman Otten greeted him at the stage door with a warrant.

A moisture dampened Freeman's brow and he said: "O gosh, Mr. Officer, can't you stall a while? I've got to play in the piece this afternoon. Anyhow, wait until I get a lawyer."

"Go ahead and tread the boards," said Otten, "but don't kid me. In case you have a sudden desire to go somewhere, I'll be sitting right where you can't help but pass me."

Art Under Difficulties.

And he did. If any one thinks one is calm, possessed, and at ease enacting intricate situations and enunciating difficult passages before an audience with the cold, gleaming eyes of a bureau fly mug on him and the clammy walls of the hoosegow in prospect, one would do well to guess again.

While Mr. Wood strode the narrow world and flung his soul into his art, his attorney was scouring the city for a judge to let him go on bail. Every now and then Mr. Wood tossed an anxious glance over his shoulder to note if the detective were still there. He invariably was.

Jail Menace Removed.

Waiting for that judge to arrive was something to be anxious about. But just as the curtain went down and Mr. Wood was going to hold out his hands for the handcuffs, in a manner of speaking, the stage door burst open and his attorney pulled the dramatic stroke of the day with a "Hold! A reprieve from the gov—I mean I gotta judge to bail you out."

So Mr. Wood went to the detective bureau and was booked and released. His attorney says the action brought by Miss Harrison is nothing and will only cause Wood some undesirable publicity.

Miss Loraine's Odd Ending.

And so we come to Miss Loraine. She was singing in the "Odds and Ends" company on Friday night when she suddenly decided to close her engagement. She decided upon this in spite of the fact that the show wasn't half over. It was the middle of the act, which is regarded as an unusual time to close the season.

Some time later Miss Loraine's attorney telephoned the information that she proposed to sue Jack Norworth, one of her employers, for $5,000 for slander. Then she disappeared. It was expected her suit would be filed yesterday. But instead there was filed a suit against Miss Loraine for $25,000 for breach of contract.

Says He Spoke No Poison Word.

Mr. Norworth was asked if he had spoken evil of the lady. He said he didn't think so. He searched his memory carefully and declared he found nothing derogatory to Miss Loraine. He said she didn't have much of a part anyhow.

Well, so there you are.

KILLED BY SEAPLANE

Veteran Author, Music and Dramatic Critic and Poet Slain in His Boat.

Gustav Kobbé

AUTHOR OF "ALL OF A SUDDEN—CARMEN"

Babylon, N. Y., July 27.—Gustav Kobbe, widely known author and a critic of music and the drama, was killed today when a naval seaplane, swooping down to the surface of the great South bay, struck a small boat in which Mr. Kobbe was sitting.

The seaplane, which was said to be traveling about sixty miles an hour, hit Mr. Kobbe's catboat squarely, carrying away the mast. One of the wings struck his head, crushing his skull, just as he was about to jump overboard.

The aviator, whose name was withheld, was not injured.

Mr. Kobbe was prominent in musical, dramatic, and art circles in New York for nearly forty years. After studying in Weisbaden, Germany, he received several degrees from Columbia university, later engaging in newspaper and magazine work. He began as an editor of the Musical Review, later becoming connected with the New York Sun, New York World, and finally the New York Herald, with which he remained for many years. In 1909 he founded the Lotus, serving as editor of that magazine.

It was an aggrieved woman's voice which called THE TRIBUNE last night at 10 o'clock.

"It's simply a shame, and we wish THE TRIBUNE would do something about it," she announced.

"Yes, no doubt, but would you mind telling what the same is," a polite young reporter asked.

"Certainly I'll explain. We can't sleep on account of the hot tamales. Now do you understand?"

"Er, ah, I beg your pardon. Do you mean they are indigestible and the matter should be taken up with Hoover?"

"Nonsense, are you stupid? The people of the Cottage Grove avenue district can't sleep because of the men who yell 'hot tamales.' We called up the police station and the sergeant laughed at us. How can one get any rest when the hot tamale peddlers yell at the top of their voices until 1 o'clock in the morning? Now will THE TRIBUNE do something for us?"

ARREST FOUR AS GAMBLERS.

Detective Sergeants Flanigan and Malloy arrested M. Racine and John Strauss, owners of a cigar store at 319 West Madison street, yesterday, as keepers of a gambling house. Two men were booked as inmates.

WOMAN'S AUTO HITS ANOTHER; CHASE FOLLOWS

Police Halt Her After Two Male Companions Escape.

"Mrs. George Simms," who later told the police she was Mrs. Harold R. Jones of 225 East Marquette road, driving with three men friends and a woman but without a license, burned the pavements from Diversey boulevard to the loop last night. The party endeavored to escape the wrath of a motorist whose car had been damaged.

Mrs. Jones' car was halted by a policeman. After two of her male friends fled the third paid $20 to Ira Reed Bowen of 516 Roscoe street, whose car was damaged. She pleaded with Lieut. Murphy of the detective bureau for secrecy, explaining she was married and only out for an evening's fun when the mishap occurred.

Runs Into Car.

The trouble happened at Clark street and Diversey boulevard, where Mr. Bowen and his wife and some friends were driving. Mrs. Jones' car struck the Bowen car and instantly ran away. Bowen's chauffeur called upon her to stop, but the driver made more speed.

The chauffeur gave chase and all traffic cleared the streets as the two cars whizzed south. At Clark and Randolph streets Policeman Ryan stopped the race and asked Mrs. Jones about her license. Then Bowen came up and told his story, demanding $20. This was paid.

Lieutenant Makes Inquiry.

Lieut. Murphy happened by and began an investigation of the car without a license. Mrs. Jones gave the name of "Mrs. Simms" and an address at 225 East Forty-seventh street. This was found to be a fake number.

Then, pleading secrecy, "Mrs. Simms" said she was the wife of Harold R. Jones, but living apart from her husband. She was driven to the Marquette road address and upon being identified, was released.

Denies All Blame.

After explanations had been made Mrs. Jones declared it had all been an unfortunate accident.

"I was merely trying to avoid publicity," she said. "I was out driving in my own car, but I was not at the wheel. I was not responsible for the accident to Mr. Bowen's car, and I did not try to evade him. I didn't know we were being followed."

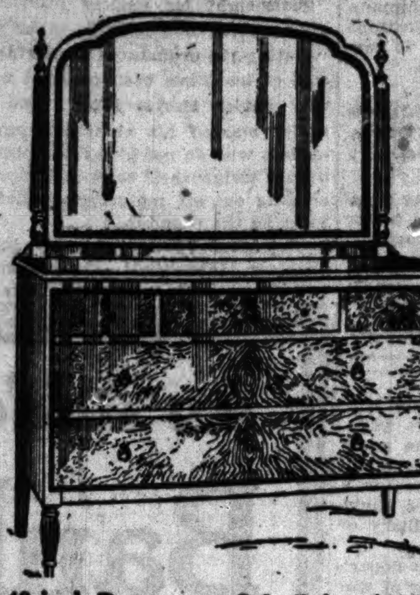
Scholle's Semi-Annual Sale of Good Furniture



48-inch Dresser....Sale Price, $89.00

Chifforobe..Sale Price, $89.00

Louis XVI. Bedroom Suite in Black Walnut or Ivory Enamel

YOU will be especially interested in the announcement of this midsummer sale of Scholle furniture; there are great opportunities for securing bargains which would be bargains even if there were no such things as war prices.

There never was a time when the question of where you buy furniture was so important as it is now. Here are a few of the reasons for this:

The advance in furniture costs have not been nearly as great as in many things which are familiar to you; therefore the honest dealer has not added very much to his pre-war prices; the dealer who isn't so particular will take advantage of generally advanced prices on all commodities to make his bargains seem sensational.

The patriotic dealer will not offer you any wood which could in any way be used for war purposes.

The intelligent, conscientious dealer knows that the government's meaning of the word "economy" is to buy, not to refrain from buying, but to be sure in buying such things as furniture that you buy so well you get your full money's worth and will not have to buy again for a long time.

If your furniture dealer has charged you only the fair prices for the goods you buy; if he has not used wood that could be used to win the war; if he has seen that the goods are made to last and is not afraid to guarantee them to do so; then he is serving you and our country in the best way he can.

We are doing our best to give you this sort of goods and service; if we fail to satisfy you entirely we ask you to allow us to give you other goods or your money back.

'WOMEN OF AGES' NETS SALVATION ARMY $15,000

Armour & Co. Girls Present Pageant at the Auditorium.

BY INDIA SHARP.

The history of womankind from the days of creation until the present time was portrayed in the pageant, "Women of the Ages," given last night in the Auditorium theater by the office girls of Armour & Co. for the benefit of the Salvation army war fund.

About $15,000 was cleared by the performance, which was staged under the direction of Mrs. J. Ogden Armour, the chairman of the woman's committee of the Salvation army war fund drive, which starts tomorrow.

The Auditorium was as crowded as it is for "first night" at grand opera, but the gowns of the occupants of the horseshow circle of boxes were not so dazzling as they are on that occasion, for, for some unfathomable feminine reason, in the cold of winter women go to an entertainment in sleeveless and almost bodiceless gowns and in the heat of summer they wear frocks with long sleeves and oftentimes high collars.

In Eight Episodes.

The pageant was in eight episodes; the first, "Creation"; the second, "Primitive Woman"; the third, "Egypt"; the fourth, "Ancient Athens"; the fifth, "Palmyra, Woman as Ruler"; the sixth, "Joan of Arc, Woman as Heroic Leader"; the seventh, "France, the Court of Louis XV.," and eighth, "Women of America." Each episode was beautifully and artistically presented and one wondered when the girls, who worked six days a week in the office, ever found time to rehearse so often as they must have done to accomplish the result that was apparent last night, for the entire production was enjoyable and interesting.

The program was opened with a concert by the Great Lakes Naval band and then Miss Mina Hager sang the famous Salvation army song, "They Always Follow Me," from the "Belle of New York." The program girls, who were dressed as demure Salvation army lassies, sang the chorus with Miss Hager. They were all members of the office force and were under the direction of Mrs. A. Watson Armour, who entertained them at dinner at the Auditorium hotel before the pageant.

Ushers in Uniform.

The ushers were members of the Girls' Marching club of Armour & Co., and very chic and smart looking they were in white duck uniforms trimmed in red braid. The flower girls, under charge of Mrs. Robert J. Dunham, were Miss Caryl Dunham, Miss Marion Clow, Miss Virginia Graves, Miss Marie Crerar, Miss Harriet McLaughlin, Miss Elizabeth Adsit, Miss Janet Pauling, Miss Katherine Ingalls, Miss Andrea Ades, Miss Edith Cummings, Miss Annabelle Hubbard, and Miss Courtney Letts.

Home for Women Given O. K. by Investigators

Charges concerning the conditions in the Lawndale Home for Women at Thirty-first street and Lawndale avenue were declared unfounded yesterday after an investigation by a committee composed of Judge Graham of the Morals court, Dr. John Dill Robertson, Assistant City Prosecutor Harry Starr, Miss Louise Orry, and Miss Louise Towsey of the adult probation office.

SHRAPNEL

The Church of the Redeemer, Universalist, Robey street and Warren avenue, will give a chicken pie dinner today in honor of members of the church in service. There are twenty-six stars on the service flag, most of the men represented being in France. Twenty-six soldiers and sailors from the Soldiers and Sailors' club will be entertained. The dinner will be followed by a program to be furnished by Mary Moncure Parker, Mrs. Frank Farnum, and Donato Colafemina, tenor.

At the South Shore Country club Sunday evening a war savings certificate which President Wilson recently bought and autographed will be auctioned off for the benefit of the fund for the orphans of French aviators.

The Depot Quartermasters' corps of the United States army has announced that positions for 200 experienced packers and 200 checkers are open. Stenographers and clerks are also wanted.

United States military camps of the far west are maintaining the high American standards for morality and cleanliness, according to the message brought to Chicago yesterday by Bishop Walter T. Sumner, formerly dean of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, who "has slept, worked and 'chowed'" in the spruce forests of Oregon, the source of the airplane timber production. Education and recreation for soldiers have effectually eliminated vice and the social evil, he said.

Patriotic doings will engage the attention of citizens in the west suburbs today. There will be a service flag raising in the Church of the Redeemer at 43 North Robey street, in which a number of Oak Park and Austin women will take part, and also a review of the Second regiment of militia reserves.

A call has been issued for forty structural and experienced layout, piping draftsmen to work for two months with the Emergency Fleet corporation, Hog Island. Those interested and capable of qualifying apply to the division of engineering, United States employment service, 29 South La Salle street.

A field kitchen and an ambulance that were purchased with funds obtained by voluntary subscription from citizens of Berwyn will soon be sent to France to be used by the Red Cross.

BAR RED LIGHT PIPE LINE STORY AT MAJOR'S TRIAL

Efforts by the defense yesterday in the trial of Maj. M. L. C. Funkhouser, suspended second deputy superintendent of police, to show the existence of a 'pipe line' for the transmission of information from Acting Chief of Police Alcock's office to certain vice dens were frustrated by President Charles E. Frazier of the civil service commission. He ruled against the admission of the testimony.

The defense claims that west side gambling house and disorderly resort proprietors knew several months in advance that Maj. Funkhouser was to be suspended and rejoiced exceedingly. A woman of the underworld told Frank Schoeffel, department inspector in the second deputy's office, that she not only knew of the impending suspension but knew the names and code numbers of all Maj. Funkhouser's investigators. She is said to have named a detective sergeant as her informant.

Lieut. John J. Naughton, secretary to the chief, was allowed to read yesterday at the trial from his notebook on the far reaching conference last March between Acting Chief Alcock, Acting First Deputy Morgan Collins, and Maj. Funkhouser. The notes quoted Alcock as saying on one occasion: "We can't fool the public very much longer on this vice stuff," and again, later, "My first object is to protect myself and my second is to run the police department."

Drug Clerk Arrested on Charge of Larceny

Stanley Grabowski, 2237 Wentworth avenue, clerk in the Public Drug company's store, 26 South State street, was arrested yesterday and locked up on a charge of larceny. He will be arraigned in the South Clark street court tomorrow.

ELECTROCUTED IN A POOL.

An open verdict was returned yesterday by a coroner's jury at an inquest held over the body of Leo Nowakowski, 18 years old, 13248 Emerald avenue. Nowakowski, who was employed by the Asbestos Shingle company, Riverdale, Ill., was found electrocuted in a pool of water at the factory. It is believed that he was repairing an electric wire when he stepped into the pool.

BROTHERS, LET THE COINS JINGLE IN TAMBOURINES!

Plans Ready for Salvation Army Drive for $250,000.

FROM THE WHITE HOUSE.

The Salvation Army—Gentlemen: I am very much interested to hear of the campaign the Salvation Army has undertaken for the money to sustain its activities and want to take the opportunity to express my admiration for the work that it has done and my sincere hope that it may be fully sustained. Cordially and sincerely yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the mark set by the Salvation Army as the quota to be raised by Chicago during the two weeks' drive opening Aug. 12.

The proceeds are to be used for war work here and in France.

The arrangements for the drive were completed yesterday by the Cook county auxiliary of the State Council of Defense.

The plans provide for a pageant, the largest athletic tournament ever held in Chicago, a parade of all nations, a monster massmeeting, a flower day, doughnuts and coffee day, an aviation meet, and, above all, a thorough canvass of the city.

Leaders in the Drive.

General chairman—Lewis E. Myers.
Vice general chairman—Mrs. J. O. Armour.
General secretary—Thomas D. Knight.
Chairman of parade committee—John T. Stockton.
Chairman of trades committee—William J. Sinek.
Chairman of carnival committee—Harry J. Ridings.
Chairman of the women's committee—Mrs. J. O. Armour.

The trades committee, headed by William J. Sinek and including thirty divisions, covering varied branches of industry, will thoroughly canvass the city.

There will be ten divisions of the Woman's committee, each under a vice chairman, and each consisting of from five to twenty teams, under captains. The Woman's committee of the State Council of Defense will also join the drive, under direction of Mrs. W. T. Heffron.

Although the drive proper does not start for two weeks, the first feature was last night's pageant at the Auditorium, under the patronage of Mrs. J. O. Armour.

Army Athletes to Meet.

The next special day will be Aug. 10, when soldiers from Camp Grant and Camp Dodge hold a wrestling and boxing tournament at Comiskey park. These matches will decide the army cantonment championship of this country. The boxers will compete for a cup donated by Lewis E. Myers, chairman of the Cook county auxiliary of the State Council of Defense.

The Chicago police and fire departments will send their best tug of war teams to act as curtain raisers, and the winner will carry away a cup presented by George W. Dixon.

The committee in charge of the tournament consists of Harry J. Ridings, chairman; Harry Grabiner, Thomas D. Knight, Capt. E. J. Eddy, Capt. John L. Griffith, and Adjt. Ryan of the Salvation army.

All-Nation Military Parade.

Sunday, Aug. 11, will be marked by an all nation military parade through the loop. The girls from the Salvation army will go along the curbs with their tin cups and tambourines, collecting an admission fee from all who care to give. In the evening there will be special services in many of the churches, addressed by men who have returned from the front.

The real drive opens on Monday, the 12, and in the evening there will be a massmeeting in one of the largest halls in the city. Col. Theodore Roosevelt, whose son, Maj. Theodore Jr., belongs to a regiment which has a Salvation army chaplain, has been invited to make the address.

BEG YOUR PARDON!

In THE TRIBUNE of July 15 the name of William A. Conroyd appeared as being among those employés of the government who escaped the draft. Mr. Conroyd writes from Camp Jackson, S. C., that he was in class 5 and with the shipping board, but waived his right and went out with the draft men from district 33 on June 24. Since July 5 he has been acting first sergeant in the field artillery replacement depot. He has been ordered back to the shipping board because of his qualifications there, but has requested leave to continue in artillery.

In a recent issue Charles G. Dawes was referred to as Lieut. Col. Dawes. He has been promoted to colonel.

In THE TRIBUNE of yesterday mention was made of the "Service Motor company, bankrupt." It is reported that this has caused annoyance to the Service Motor Truck company of 2617 Wabash avenue, which, of course, was not intended. The item referred only to the Service Motor Supply company.

Fireman Catches Infant Tossed from Balcony

Mrs. B. O. Suydam of 4546 North Ashland avenue, trapped by a fire which for the second time in the night threatened the apartment building in which she lives, tossed her baby, 2 years old, from a second story porch early yesterday and then leaped. The baby dropped safely into the arms of a fireman and so did Mrs. Suydam. Neither was injured seriously.

Twenty-seven families were threatened with suffocation when the flames were discovered. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

68 ICE DEALERS IN ELLER'S NET AS CHEATERS

Eight Accused of Gross Shortweight Frauds to Stand Trial.

Sixty-eight ice dealers accused of giving short weight or in other ways violating the ordinances governing the sale of ice have been rounded up by City Sealer Morris Eller. The city sealer started his campaign against dealers who do not give full weight or do not weigh their sales last Monday, sending out six motorcycle policemen to make the roundup.

Only those guilty of gross infraction or intentional shortweighting will be made to face formal charges. Notices have been sent to others to appear in Mr. Eller's office.

Summoned Into Court.

Those who Mr. Eller says will be summoned into court and the charges against them are:

Casimir Borowski, 2831 North Harding avenue; driver for the John R. Leonard Ice company, 2849 Milwaukee avenue; short weight and scales set ten pounds fast.

Morris Grossman of the Morris Grossman Ice company, 1924 West Division street; scales 10 pounds fast and short weight.

Faces Three Charges.

John O'Neill, 3747 South Halsted street, dealer; short weight, scales 10 pounds fast, and scales unsealed.

Thomas Mackola, 5915 South Wabash avenue, driver for the National Ice company; short weight and scales 15 pounds fast.

Thomas Nolan, 830 West Fifty-third street, dealer; short weight and no scales.

Frank Mackola, 17 North Lotus avenue, driver for the Madison Supply and Van company, 5363 West Madison street; short weight.

The eight will be arraigned before Municipal Judge Haas, room 806 city hall, Monday afternoon.

Dr. J. H. Landis, Brother of the Judge, Seriously Ill

Cincinnati, O., July 27.—[Special.]—The condition of Dr. J. H. Landis, former president of the American Health association, and prominent in American and European scientific societies, who is seriously ill at Christ hospital in this city, took a turn decidedly for the worse here tonight. Judge K. M. Landis of Chicago, a brother, and other relatives have been notified. Charles Landis, former congressman from Indiana, another brother, was at the bedside for several days.

U. OF C. FLYER, IN CLOUDS, SEES BATTLE OF MARNE

Lieut. D. E. Knight Writes Home of Experiences Above Trenches.

After a battle in the clouds with an armored German plane, Lieut. Duerson E. Knight, who was known as "Dewey" Knight in his student days at the University of Chicago, saw the Hun machine plunge to the ground like a flaming meteor.

Three days later his squadron watched the struggle for the Marne, while flying only 300 feet over the trenches, back and forth through the bursting shells of the Hun and allies' barrages.

Lieut. Knight, who is with the British Flying corps on detached service, describes his experience in two letters received yesterday by his father, Thomas D. Knight.

Letters from Front.

The first letter, dated June 27, follows:

"I arose at 3 a. m. before dawn and went up on patrol. It was thick as soup 'upstairs' and but little could be seen on the ground. The patrol had just climbed to 4,000 feet on the line, when the Hun Archie put up a burst in front of us. It was obviously a signal to some machine below and at once the leader spotted a Hun L. V. G. close to the lines and very low. I was flying the rear of the leader's formation and as he went down did a half roll in the opposite direction from the leader's turning dive. I was lucky, for in the dive the leader and I came out close together on the Hun's tail. We both opened fire at close range. Almost at once a flame came out from the side and then the whole machine burst into flames. It was a wonderful and awe-inspiring sight in the murky atmosphere to see this flaming meteor plunging toward the ground. I pulled out and watched him hit the ground and explode burning petrol for yards around.

An Armored Machine.

"The machine was undoubtedly an armored one for use against troops and we surprised him at his work. I know our troops in the trenches rejoiced when he went flaming to his destruction. I have seen many machines in flames, but all from a distance until this time, when I was within fifty yards when he burst into flames.

"At the second 'show' we engaged a two seater, who went east after a few shots, apparently unharmed. Then we suddenly came upon a Hun Halbustadt two seater marked to look like our machines. But the shape of the machine gave him away. The leader and I engaged him, but the Hun observer put an explosive bullet through the leader's tank, forcing him to leave the scrap and go home. I followed this chap over as far as I dared an dthen came back in a cloud of 'Archie smoke.'

Over the Trenches.

The second letter, dated June 30, says:

"There is a bit of a straff going on on a nearby front, as one of the British armies went over to create a diversion for the public who are so used to reading of Hun offensives. We were sent to that particular sector to engage Hun reinforcements, other ground targets, and Hun machines. We took off in a beautiful squadron formation and reaching the line found the clouds were at 1,000 feet, blotting out the ground. Above the clouds was beautiful and serene, but below was an inferno. We came down on the Hun side of the battle at 300 feet, passed through the Hun barrage, then the battle area of bursting shells and smoke, and then our own barrage."

Passing back of our lines, we turned and went back into Hunland again, looking for targets. It was great excitement, with the shells swishing around and bursting underneath us and the machine gun fire from the ground trying to bring us down. My machine was only hit once. I did fly through the burst of a gas shell but knew enough not to breathe after the first smell until I was well clear of the burst.

"We tore along, sweeping the battle time and again for targets and enemy aircraft, but nothing could be seen. I was continually tossed about by bursting shells and our guns firing under my machine. We worked back and forward just in front of them, and it was sport watching the gunners working to keep up the barrage. As we passed over the troops in the trenches would wave to us and we back to them. It always 'bucks them up' to have us hovering over them.

"I watched our troops coming up along the roads and supplies being rushed up. Then there were the wounded and ambulances coming back to the rear, and here and there a batch of great coated Hun prisoners. From above we could see the tremendous organization of an army attacking. Even from our point of vantage the actual battle area was one of indescribable confusion, and I don't wonder that the staff has a hard time telling just what is going on."

LABOR DAY PLANS

Progress Made Toward Biggest Celebration in the Country

FURTHER progress has been made toward making Chicago's Labor day celebration the greatest civic labor demonstration in the history of the country. Following instructions of the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor, the executive board of that body has decided to recommend that a committee of twenty-five be appointed to coöperate with the Chicago Building Trades council toward making the celebration a success.

This recommendation will be offered to the next meeting of the federation, to be held Sunday, Aug. 4, when the committee will be named, and real work will be begun.

Simon O'Donnell, president of the Building Trades council, is still in Washington, laying some of the plans for the demonstration. He is expected to return to Chicago Monday or Tuesday, and then to be in a position to announce the speakers for the day.

Negroes Will Celebrate Anniversary of Suffrage

Chicago Negroes will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their admission to suffrage with a celebration at 8 o'clock tomorrow evening in the Original Providence Baptist church, at Walnut and Leavitt streets. William H. Harrison of Oklahoma City will speak on "The Negro and the War."

HONOR FOR KINGS IN THIS WEEK OF ANNIVERSARIES

Italy, Japan, Switzerland, and England Will Celebrate.

BY EX-ATTACHE.

This is a week of anniversaries. Tomorrow King Victor Emmanuel III. completes the eighteenth year of his reign, while on the following day Emperor Yoshi-Hito will celebrate at the other end of the world the date of his accession to the throne of Japan, just six years ago. Thursday is the national holiday of Switzerland, the anniversary of the foundation of the so-called Everlasting league, made between the men of Uri, Schwyz, and Nidwalden, for the liberation of their native land from the tyranny of Austria, and which, known as the Vow of Grutli, has furnished inspiration to playwrights and poets, of each one of the six centuries or more that have passed since then.

Finally, on Sunday next the lieges of King George, in every corner, no matter how remote, of his vast empire, upon which the sun never sets, will observe with prayers for victory, now at last within sight, the day on which Great Britain four years ago threw down the gauntlet to Germany, in the cause of Belgium and of France, the war developing into a titanic struggle for her own existence, as well as for that of her allies, and into a fight for the emancipation of the world from the blight of Hohenzollern militarism and designs for the despotic domination of all mankind.

No Holiday to Italy's King.

King Victor Emmanuel has never permitted the date of his succession to the crown to be made an occasion for national rejoicing. For it is also the anniversary of the assassination at Mona of that father to whom he was so deeply attached, and whom he still mourns. When in Rome he would invariably begin July 29 by visiting the Pantheon, where the late King Humbert lies at rest, and, after prayers at his tomb, would procced with his wife, his widowed mother, and his children to attend a memorial mass in the chapel of the quirinal, which has now been restored by order of the pope to use for divine service.

Even if the anniversary were not saddened for Victor Emmanuel by the memory of the murder of his father, he would be but little disposed to approve of popular festivities and rejoicings in his honor at a moment when Italy is in the throes of war and the greater portion of his metropolitan palace at the quirinal, especially the state ballroom, the state banqueting hall, and the great throne room, are crowded with wounded soldiers and sailors, whose injuries have been sustained and whose limbs have been mangled or lost in his service, and in that of the nation.

Gives Home to Soldiers.

For the king has converted not only the palaces which he owns at Florence, at Milan, at Turin, Venice, Naples, and Palermo into hospitals for his wounded soldiers and sailors, but even his own personal residence at Rome, where every day Queen Helen and Queen Marguerite, the now 18 year old Princess Yolanda, and the Duchesses Helene and Letitia of Aosta, may be found busily engaged in active duty as nurses.

But it is not alone in this manner that the hold of the ancient dynasty of Savoy on the people of Italy has been strengthened to a far greater degree than any one would have considered it possible eighteen and twenty years ago. Victor Emmanuel, after showing himself the most sagacious, broad minded, and enlightened of rulers, in times of peace, has proved himself altogether admirable in the present war.

Constantly at the Front.

Ever since, with the full approval of his constitutional advisers, and in accordance with overwhelming public sentiment, he committed Italy to an espousal of the cause of the powers of the entente he has been at the front almost uninterruptedly, his visits to Rome to his wife and children having been very few and far between and then only for the briefest period, when his presence in the Eternal City was needed for some business of state, of a particularly pressing and important character.

But while he has thus been at the front, sharing all the hardships and fatigues of his officers and soldiers, eating their fare and sharing their dugouts, their huts and their tents, he has not attempted in any way to interfere with the operations of Generalissimo Diaz, any more than he did with those of Diaz's predecessor in the command in chief, Count Cadorna.

True, the commander in chief of the army belongs by constitutional right to the sovereign. But Victor Emmanuel, although trained from his infancy as a soldier, and devoted, like all his forbears of the House of Savoy to the career of arms, abandoned from the very outset of the struggle the supreme direction of all military operations along the Austrian frontier, to the officers chosen for the chief command, by the unanimous vote of his principal military advisers—to generals whose life had been spent in careful and elaborate preparation for the present war.

Victor Emmanuel gives his advice whenever it is asked by the generalissimo, though always in a deprecatory, modest, and even reluctant fashion, leaving him an absolutely free hand, and bowing to his superior strategical and professional knowledge. Instead of interfering and disturbing in any way the plans of the generalissimo and of the general staff, he contents himself, like King Albert of Belgium, with the rôle of arbiter when any problem is referring to him by the general staff for final decision as ruler of the destinies of the nation. He devotes himself to visiting the most advanced trenches, defenses, and outposts, for the purpose of encouraging the men, and of rewarding on the spot pieces of heroism and sacrifice to the national cause, and with rescuing the wounded and dying from under the very heaviest fire.

Emblem of Mikado.

King Victor Emmanuel's principal emblem of sovereignty is the so-called iron crown, consisting of a broad gold band, some fourteen centuries old, and containing, fastened to the interior of the circlet, a long, bent iron nail, of much greater age, and asserted to have been used for the nailing of Christ to the cross nearly 2,000 years ago.

The insignia of sovereignty of the mikado are still older. For they consist of a mirror, a sword, and a tusk shaped jewel, all of which are said to have been bestowed upon Jimmu, first emperor of Japan, by his mother, the sun goddess, 600 years before the birth of Christ. According to Japanese sacred legend, the sun goddest bestowed these symbols of sovereignty upon her son with the words:

"Look upon this mirror as if it were mine own spirit and reverence it as you would my own presence. For centures upon centuries shall thy descendants rule this empire. Govern this country with purity, like the light that radiates from the surface of the mirror. Deal with thy subjects with a gentleness typified by the bland and soft luster of the jewel. Combat the enemies of thy empire with this sword."

Used Ever Since.

And these words have been used ever since, throughout all these 2,500 years, in the investiture of Jimmus successor on the throne of Japan, in the direct male line, without a break, until the present reign of Emperor Yoshi-Hito, who celebrates the day after tomorrow the sixth anniversary of his accession.

The influence of the regalia on the Japanese people is phenomenal, since it dates from the foundation of their empire, and from the dawn of their history. Without the regalia, the empire would hardly be conceivable to the Japanese people. The whole tradition of the dynasty is bound up therewith, and the possession thereof bestows sovereignty by right divine. In fact, the instinct of the Japanese people is to acknowledge no man as emperor unless he has been invested with the sacred emblems of sovereignty preserved in the great temple at Ise, a fane picturesquely embosomed in a wood of magnificent old trees, and under the care of a high priestess, who has always been a virgin princess of the reigning house.

NO REWARDS

Attorney General Stops Special Payments to Policemen for Capture of Escaped Convicts.

Mild consternation prevailed in the police department yesterday when the word was spread that hereafter there will be no rewards paid for the capture of escaped prisoners from Joliet. This is a ruling from the office of Attorney General Brundage, who holds that policemen already are paid for making arrests and should not receive rewards.

The announcement was made by Warden Murphy of Joliet in the case of the capture of James McFadden, a safe blower with a long record, who escaped from the honor farm. He was taken by Detective Sergts. William O'Connor and Richard Burke.

For many years it has been customary for the state to pay a reward of $50 for the arrest of a fugitive and $25 for the arrest of a parole breaker. O'Connor and Burke are said to have spent $25 of their personal funds for information leading to McFadden's capture, and now this will be charged to experience.

It is declared the ruling will be in effect not only throughout Illinois but will affect the capture of fugitives in other states.

$250,000 THEFT SUSPECT FREED ON $35,000 BOND

Judge Swanson Releases Man in Spite of Fisher's Agreement.

Judge Harry M. Fisher probably will be interested in the following bits of information:

Isadore H. Starr of 124 North Paulina street was quietly released from the county jail on bonds after 9 o'clock last night. His bonds were approved by Municipal Judge J. A. Swanson. Starr is one of four men jailed a week ago for the robbery of $250,000 worth of jewelry from the Heller-Rose company in the Marshall field annex.

Bond Is Reduced.

The bonds for Starr and Samson, arrested with him, were first fixed by Judge La Buy at $500,000. Attorneys for the pair, however, appealed to Judge Fisher to lower the bonds, and the judge did so, fixing them at $35,000. He did this with the provision that Starr and Samson should not be released unless the state's attorney first examined their bonds and approved them.

So far as could be learned last night the state's attorney was not notified regarding Starr's release. Judge Swanson said he did not take the case up with the state's attorney's office before approving the bonds. Jail officials declared they saw nothing of a representative of the state's attorney.

Made No Inquiry.

"I made no inquiry into the case," Judge Swanson said. "The lawyer for Starr came to me and he scheduled about $75,000 worth of property. This was sufficient, in my judgment, to release the man. The law is that any judge may release a prisoner so long as a sufficient bail is offered, and the judge is satisfied with it. Of course, we may be arbitrary and force them to go before the judge who fixed the bonds, but I had no reason to be so about this case. I knew nothing about it; it was the same to me as any other case."

Judge Swanson declares he knew nothing of the circumstances under which Judge Fisher had fixed the amount of the bonds. He also confessed he knew nothing about the fact that Starr was held in connection with the Heller-Rose robbery.

Implicated by Fritzel.

Starr and Samson were implicated in the jewel robbery by George Fritzel. Fritzel declared in a confession to the state's attorney that Starr and Samson had rented a room above the offices of the Heller-Rose company and that the robbers made the getaway through this room. Fritzel also declared Starr and Samson disposed of some of the stolen jewelry.

SMITH-METZES IN TIFF; MARY PLUGS DAVID WITH GUN

Clark Street Hotel Owner Opines Wife Was Hasty but Forgives.

"Dave" Smith of 236 North Clark street, who has been arrested numerous times as keeper of a disorderly house, but perhaps not so many times as Mary Metz, his wife, is a patient in the Policlinic hospital with a bullet wound in his arm. Mary Metz is said to have gone to Gary, Ind.

She is said to have departed immediately after firing the shot which, according to Smith, "plugged him in the arm but didn't hurt much."

"We was just having a little family tiff," said Smith, after the Chicago avenue police discovered the shooting had been kept quiet since last Thursday. "Mary was a little hasty, I guess. She picked up the gat and cut loose. But I wouldn't prosecute her. She'll think better of it and repent maybe."

So Mary won't be prosecuted and she can come back from Gary whenever she wants to. The Smiths, or, rather, the Smith-Metzes, have been raided more than any other north side resort.

They have been raided through secret doors, with dictagraphs, and every other wory. Their Clark street hotel suffered a reverse under the abatement law and "Dave" got into the limelight by appealing for state funds to carry his case to the Supreme court. He said the reformers were hurting his business.

ACTORS, ALWAYS HELPING OTHERS, NOW ASK FUNDS

And now the actors, who year after year have given benefit performances for every conceivable relief and charity, are giving a benefit performance for their own fraternity. It is to be held at Cohan's Grand opera house on the afternoon of Monday, Aug. 5. Every star of the stage who is in the city at the time will take part.

The money will go to the upkeep of the Lights club, the actors' country club on Long Island. This club has a membership of 600, nearly 50 per cent of whom are in the army, and have therefore been exempted from payment of dues. Through this a deficit has arisen, which must be overcome.

That a benefit performance be given to make up the deficit was the suggestion of Victor Moore, the president, now appearing at Cohan's Grand with Peggy O'Neill in "Patsy on the Wing." Both Mr. Moore and Miss O'Neill will take part in the performance and some of the others who have promised to appear are Marie Cahill, James J. Corbett, Sue Creighton, The Cansinos, Duncan Sisters, Henry Lewis, Jack Norworth, Frank Tinney, Harry Watson Jr., and May Robson.

If You Found $30 in Bills Saturday, Then Read This

Somebody in Chicago is hereby advised that the black bill folder they found Saturday in Dearborn street, between Lake and Madison streets, is the property of Jackie Clarence D. Courtney of the Great Lakes Naval Training station, and that the $20 bill and the $10 bill therein represents all his worldly wealth. He lost it from his blouse Saturday afternoon. In addition to the money, there is a pass, signed by Paymaster Lynch and dated July 26. He has appealed to THE TRIBUNE to recover it. Kindly send it to him in care of the Administration building, room 33, the Great Lakes station.

The Motor Truck Is Essential

THE continued manufacture of motor trucks, to be used in the transportation of materials for direct or indirect war work or to be used in work of national civilian importance, is an essential.

While motor trucks are of great importance in relieving transportation problems, their manufacture cannot be out of proportion to other transportation necessities, such as railroads and steamships. A grave responsibility has been placed not only upon the manufacturer of motor trucks, but upon the present owners of such vehicles. We must all do our part to the limit of our ability. The situation is this:

FIRST, motor trucks are to be sold only for necessary work, either directly for war work or to facilitate the transportation of such essentials as food, fuel etc., or for important construction work.

SECOND, motor truck owners must see to it that their trucks are operated so as to require the minimum of spare parts and repair work.

THIRD, no truck must be discarded if it can be rebuilt so as to operate efficiently.

FOURTH, every truck in use must be routed to carry as many tons a day as is economically possible. Empty runs must be cut to a minimum.

Owners of trucks and new purchasers should investigate the manufacturers' standing and service facilities which will make it possible for the owner to do his proper share in the responsibility of owning a motor truck.

As manufacturers of THE AUTOCAR MOTOR TRUCK, we are going to live up to our full responsibility and duty as recommended by the War Industries Board.

FIND 800 HOGS NEAR DEATH ON DOMINION RANCH

Starvation Conditions Are Revealed in Official Investigation.

One mule, too weak to kick, and 800 hogs, said to be on the verge of death from starvation, was the sight which met the eyes of federal investigators at the Old Dominion company's hog ranch, one mile north of Glen Ellyn, yesterday.

Action was taken as the result of the complaint of members of the State Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and holders of hog certificates issued by the company, which has offices at 20 East Jackson boulevard, Chicago.

As the result of a short investigation and examination, two of the hogs were shot. The investigators learned that there were but nine sacks of bran on the place with which to feed the mule and 800 hogs.

One Day's Feed in Sight.

Dr. J. M. Kaiser, assistant state veterinarian, after looking at the bran sacks, said there was just about enough feed on the place for one day.

The company, of which H. L. Griffin is president and A. J. Ham secretary, according to the terms on its certificates, sold for $100 each, agrees to purchase and raise a female hog, feed it two years, and then sell and divide the profits from the litters equally with the owner of the hog. In the event of the hog's death the company agrees to furnish a second hog free of charge.

Many of the investors in the hog ranch became dissatisfied with their purchase after vain efforts to get a return on their money and made complaint to the federal government. State's Attorney Hoyne and the humane society.

Trouble Out of Blue Sky.

A few days ago the company came into the limelight when it is said to have violated the "blue sky" law.

Acting on the reports received, Burt Hazelton, superintendent of the Humane society, asked the coöperation of the federal government and the state in making an inquiry. Dr. J. M. Kaiser, veterinarian; Assistant State's Attorney Walter Stanton, a representative from the department of justice; L. O. Thiene, superintendent of the Du Page county branch of the Humane society; W. P. Stuart, the general superintendent, and Supt. Hazelton comprised the party which made the trip to the farm in automobiles. They found three old ramshackle buildings, the 800 apparently starving hogs, and the weakened mule.

Attendants Make Complaints.

Paul Louis, caretaker, and Ambrose Hill, the latter of Oak Park, were on the place in charge of the hogs. Both complained they had not been able to get enough feed for the hogs from the company, and when the investigation went a little further, Hill said that his sister, Miss Anna Hill of Oak Park, who owned the farm, had not been able to collect the rent.

Louis told of investing $1,100 for eleven hogs, but when he saw the animals were not being fed properly he made a complaint, then demanded eleven hogs or his money. He received neither, Louis said. Feed dealers in the district told of supplying some feed for the hogs, but said they stopped deliveries when they failed to get their money.

Too Weak to Stand.

Dr. Kaiser, after going from one group of thin hogs to others in the same condition, most of them too weak to stand, shook his head.

"The thinness of these animals would scare the fat off a real porker," was the comment of the veterinarian.

Taking a revolver from his pocket, Dr. Kaiser pulled the trigger and killed a hog, which was apparently dying. Louis told the investigators the hog was the property of a Miss Bryan, a school teacher in Oak Park, who had purchased it through a certificate. A second hog was killed, but the identity of the owner was not learned.

Dr. Kaiser said that yesterday he had made only a preliminary investigation, but would return tomorrow and examine each hog to determine if it is suffering from some disease in addition to being starved.

Warrants May Be Issued.

Assistant State's Attorney Stanton said he would investigate Louis' story and those of others and if verified would have warrants sworn out for the arrest of Griffin and Ham charging them with operating a confidence game.

"I never knew that hogs could get so thin," said Assistant State's Attorney Stanton.

"Recently, I understood, both Griffin and Ham were in trouble through violations of the blue sky law. I am not a farmer, but even a layman can see that conditions at the place are bad. It is a big waste of food products in such a war crisis as this to allow those hogs to die from lack of feed.

"The state veterinarian left a man in charge of the place and an effort will be made to get the animals into shape so that they can be sold. In this way there may be something left for those who bought stock in the company. With hogs at present prices the company ought to have made money. We have not yet looked up the officers of the concern, but W. H. Culver is named as treasurer on certificates we saw. The concern was an Illinois corporation. Its purpose was to get stockholders to buy a sow. Later they were to receive their pigs or the money."

Warrants will probably be taken out for two officers of the company tomorrow, it was said by members of the investigating committee on the way back to Chicago.

Miss Ruth G. Moore has earned the distinction of holding down two men's jobs. She is manager of the Western Union telegraph office in Wilmette and star trombonist in the Wilmette band.

Miss Moore is only 20 years old and formerly was a telegraph operator in Fort Wayne, Ind. She was for eight years trombone soloist in concert and orchestra work. When she entered the telegraph office in Wilmette she found a vacancy in the trombone section of the band and instantly volunteered.

She has a sister, Nolia, also an operator, who plays the cornet, and now it is hoped this young woman may find a place near Wilmette so that the sisters may both appear in the band.

JOHN V. LE MOYNE IS DEAD AT 90; CAME HERE IN '52

John V. Le Moyne, Chicago pioneer, died yesterday at Baltimore, Md., at the age of 90 years. His son, William M. Le Moyne of 1215 North State street, left for Baltimore last night.

Mr. Le Moyne was born in Washington county, Pa., Nov. 17, 1828, and came to Chicago in 1852 as a practicing attorney. He married Miss Julia Murray in 1853. He was a Democrat, and in the Greeley campaign in 1872 received the nomination of the Independents for member of congress from the Third congressional district. His opponent was Charles B. Farwell, who was successful. In 1874 the two were again rival candidates, and Mr. Le Moyne was declared elected by a majority of 106 votes. Thirty years ago he retired from business and took up his residence in Baltimore.

He is survived by eight children, Frank Le Moyne, Mrs. Charles Ellicott, Mrs. Janon Fisher, and Mrs. Austin MsLanahan of Baltimore; William M. Le Moyne, L. V. Le Moyne, Mrs. George D. Forest, and Mrs. William B. McIllvaine of Chicago.

Mr. Le Moyne was one of the founders of the old Philharmonic society. He donated the ground at Waveland avenue and Rokeby street on which the Le Moyne public school was built in 1915. It was named for his father, F. Julius Le Moyne. He was a large land owner. The Le Moyne building, at Wabash avenue and Lake street, is a part of the estate.

U. S. YIELDS POINT TO LAKE SEAMEN TO AVOID STRIKE

Extra Conference Today May Reach Final Decision.

Washington, D. C., July 27.—[Special.]—A hurried conference of shipping board officials and labor leaders was called here today as a result of the growing danger that the members of the Seamen's Union of the Great Lakes and the Marine Firemen, Oilers and Water Tenders' union would strike on Monday and demoralize traffic on the great lakes despite the warning of embarrassment to the nation's war activities given by Chairman Hurley of the shipping board on Thursday.

At the close of the conference, which was attended by Mr. Hurley, former Gov. Bass of New Hampshire, who has charge of the labor situation for the shipping board; Andrew Furuseth, president, and Victor L. Olander, secretary of the Lake Seamen's union, it was announced that the government would grant still another demand made by the men by establishing training schools for seamen on the great lakes and compel the Lake Carriers' association to place recruits therefrom on their ships.

"No Reason for Strike."

With this step taken Mr. Hurley asserted that there is no legitimate reason for a strike, and sent telegrams to the union leaders to that effect.

In the view of union officials, however, Secretary Victor A. Olander of the seamen's union said the order of the board only made the situation worse, and asserted that the Lake Carriers' association had "resorted to a shameful trick." The modification by the shipping board of the nation's appeal for men to man its merchant ships and in training recruits, Secretary Olander held, means that the Lake Carriers' association will not have to train men.

Andrew Furuseth, Victor Olander, Patrick O'Brien, and Tom Conway, officers of the unions, have been asked to a final conference tomorrow with Chairman Hurley and Mr. Bass to determine whether the men shall go out Monday, as planned.

Some Points Settled.

"Mr. Furuseth admitted that the shipping board had settled to their satisfaction the question of the welfare discharge book, which the board had ordered the Lake Carriers' association to abolish," said Mr. Hurley. "The question of overtime, which had been placed before the shipping board, was settled by an order issued to the Lake Carriers' association to the effect that the hours of work on the Lake Carriers' association vessels should not exceed those prescribed in the seamen's act.

"The demands of the men concerning wages will be promptly considered and adjusted by the shipping board as soon as they are submitted for this purpose.

"The only remaining question at issue which was covered in the strike resolution dated at Buffalo, N. Y., June 25, 1918, was the statement that the Lake Carriers' association declined to coöperate with the United States shipping board in the nation's appeal for men to man its merchant ships and in training recruits to be placed on their vessels for service. The Lake Carriers' association has agreed to sign the 'call to the sea' with the modification of the last paragraph specifying that the agreement entered into last August between the ship owners, the government, and the seamen applied to the Atlantic and Gulf."

To Establish Schools.

The shipping board today sent the following telegram to Capt. Irving L. Evans, section chief, Cleveland, O.:

"Please establish at your earliest possible convenience a training station on the lakes for seamen in accordance with Mr. Howard's present plan of educating and training seamen, firemen, engineers, and officers, with headquarters at the most convenient lake port that in your judgment is best suited for the purpose. You will please advise the officers of the Lake Carriers' association and the independent steamship companies on the great lakes that the United States shipping board will immediately start our recruiting plan and that they must be prepared to carry out our instructions in this direction."

Order to Carriers.

Mr. Hurley wired the Lake Carriers' association and the independent steamship companies on the great lakes:

"The United States shipping board desires to have the ships now operated by your associations coöperate with our training service which has been established on the great lakes by Capt. Irving L. Evans, Guardian building, Cleveland, O. You will be called upon to place the recruits from this service on your vessels and to give them every facility to obtain the necessary training needed to make able seamen of them. In order to do this it will be desirable to work them watch and watch with the experienced seamen on the vessels.

"These men from our training service will be placed on your vessels in the following proportion: Where eight able seamen are now carried there will be carried six able seamen and four recruits. The wages of these recruits will be determined by the government in so far as possible in accordance with our present practice."

MOONEY GIVEN LEASE OF LIFE BY GOVERNOR

Los Angeles, Cal., July 27.—Assurance that fullest consideration will be given to the case of Thomas J. Mooney, at San Quentin prison, under sentence to hang next month, was promised today by Gov. William D. Stephens in announcing a stay of execution until Dec. 13.

This reprieve is the latest development in the famous case, which has attracted world-wide attention, growing out of the preparedness parade dynamiting in San Francisco, two years ago.

Before Stephens acts upon President Wilson's request for a new trial for Mooney the voluminous records in the murder trial will be examined by the governor.

Although the formal judgment of the Supreme court has not been handed down, Gov. Stephens said he announced his intention of granting Mooney a reprieve at this time in order that persons throughout the country might be assured the case would be given the fullest consideration by the executive and judicial branches of the state government.

MOONEY MEETINGS TODAY.

In labor circles today is known as "Mooney day" throughout the country, to be signalized by demonstrations for the procuring of a new trial or a pardon for the condemned man. In Chicago the demonstration will be held at the street car men's hall, Ashland avenue and Van Buren street, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Frank P. Walsh, labor chairman of the war labor board, will be the principal speaker.

Other demonstrations will be held in New York, with Samuel Gompers as the principal speaker, in Washington with Bourke Cochran as the orator, and in San Francisco with John H. Walker of the Illinois Miners' union as the speaker.

These meetings will adopt resolutions to be presented to President Wilson tomorrow by a committee headed by Bourke Cockran.

"Inspector" Takes Camera Bank and $460 Deposit

Mrs. John Bauer of 5747 Wentworth avenue decided the safest depository for her savings of $460 was her camera, so she used it as a bank. Yesterday, however, a man visited her home, said he was a health inspector, and asked to inspect the premises. When he left the camera was missing.

HIDDEN VALUES in a TWIN SIX

ASIDE from the good looks and known performance of the Packard Twin Six, are definite qualities of enduring worth which are built into the structure of the car.

For instance, the means of taking up wear. At every point where wear occurs provision is made to restore a perfect fit. This is done largely by means of special take-up devices, which are either adjustable or easily replaceable at small cost.

That is one of the reasons why a Packard when rightly used is almost indestructible. A small thing in itself but big in its results.

Why Have Your Delivery Or Hauling Service at the Mercy of the Weather?

REST today—death tomorrow! That's the fate of many a horse on hot Sundays and Mondays. Even light feeding on Sunday doesn't save them all. They go out Monday with a fire inside them as well as scorching pavements around them.

Even if using horse power were merciful, even if horses should not die in hot weather with heavy loss to you and disruption of your service—horses would still be the slowest, most expensive transportation power you could use.

Contrast the cost of horses, their care, their upkeep, their slowness, their death rate with the

BIG CANNON AND SHELL FACTORY PROMISED CITY

United States to Call Upon Chicago for Munitions.

BY HENRY M. HYDE.

Chicago industry is called on to immediately provide for the manufacture of 5,000 big gun shells daily. Also—and this call comes by wire—the city is asked to handle a great factory for the making of big guns. The necessary machinery is ready and will be furnished by the government. If it proves necessary the erection of new buildings will be taken care of. The immediate call is for the hearty and patriotic coöperation of Chicago business men.

That is the message which Dorr E. Felt, regional advisor of the war industries board, brings back with him from Washington. Mr. Felt was nominated for the place by the manufacturers of the middle west. The "region" of which he is head includes all of Iowa, Illinois north of Springfield, and the northern third of Indiana.

Demands to Increase.

The rapidly increasing war demands of the government will make constantly larger demands on the industrial resources of the middle west. One of the greatest tasks of Mr. Felt and his new organization will be to help the government to get the manufacturers of Iowa, northern Indiana, and Illinois busy on war work. The longer the war continues the greater the demands will be on them all.

How great these demands are likely to be is indicated by the fact that the war industries board has absolutely forbidden the establishment of new industries of any kind in all the eastern territory bounded by a line drawn from Maine west through Buffalo, N. Y., to Altoona, Pa., and thence south and east to the mouth of Chesapeake bay. The increase of manufacture in this small strip of territory is impossible because of the great congestion already existing there. It is not possible to get fuel for power purposes into that section more than to supply the industries and other demands which already exist.

Danger Pointed Out.

Months ago THE TRIBUNE pointed out exactly the danger which is now thus recognized. At that time more than 90 per cent of all the war orders of the government had been placed in this tiny strip of eastern territory.

With more than 2,000,000 men now under arms and plans on foot to double that force, it is plain that vastly more guns, munitions, and supplies of all kinds will be vitally needed. It will tax the manufacturing and industrial resources of the whole United States to fill the demand.

To aid in the process of calling all these resources into action the war industries board has divided the whole country into some twenty "regions," of which Mr. Felt is head of the "ninth." His first job will be to determine just what war work is possible in every section of the territory over which he presides. To help him in this canvass and in the future placing of war orders the "region" has been divided into "subregions," with a chairman at the head of each.

Division of Iowa.

Iowa is divided into five subregions, with chairmen as follows:

No. 11—Sioux City	E. J. Wallen
No. 12—Council Bluffs	H. A. Searle
No. 13—Des Moines	Carl Weeks
No. 14—Cedar Rapids	W. L. Cherry
No. 15—Davenport	J. C. McCarthy

The northern half of Illinois has ten subregions. The chairmen are as follows:

No. 1—Chicago	John W. O'Leary
Vice chairman	L. T. Jamme
No. 2—Rockford	George D. Roper
No. 3—Freeport	J. T. Jackson
No. 4—Aurora	R. R. Fauntleroy
No. 5—Joliet	W. S. Pitcher
No. 6—Danville	E. M. Burr
No. 7—La Salle	E. Roth
No. 8—Moline	G. A. Stephens
No. 9—Peoria	Paul E. Herschel Sr.
No. 10—Decatur	W. M. Wood

The northern third of Indiana is especially important from a manufacturing standpoint. Here is the list of men who preside over the subregions into which it is divided:

No. 16—Gary	A. F. Turner
No. 17—South Bend	Arthur R. Baker
No. 18—Fort Wayne	E. H. Briggs
No. 19—Huntington	J. W. Caswell

Opens Offices Here.

Mr. Felt himself has opened his headquarters in suite 748 at 29 South La Salle street. His appointment as regional advisor of the resources and conversion section of the war industries board is only a month old. His work has just begun.

There is hardly a manufacturer in the territory which he controls, no matter how small or where located, who may not be called on within the next few months to devote all or a part of his resources to the war work of the government.

The charges against seven men who were arrested last week during a strike at the plant of the Mark Manufacturing Co., Evanston, were nolle prossed yesterday by Police Magistrate John F. Boyer.

DEMPSEY STOPS FULTON IN 23 SECONDS

VAUGHN LANDS SOFT VICTORY AT BOSTON, 7-1

BY I. E. SANBORN.

Boston, Mass., July 27.—[Special.]—By the simple process of switching Paskert and Merkle in the batting order, Manager Mitchell produced a winning combination out of the slipping Cubs in the opening game of their series with the Braves, and they copped for him, 7 to 1, without overheating themselves.

Big Hippo Vaughn pitched what ought to have been a shutout game, holding the Braves to four hits, two of them scratches. But a pair of them got behind one of Paskert's wild throws and registered a tally for Boston in the sixth.

First Round Decisive.

The battle was over in the first inning when the Cubs assaulted Dick Rudolph for four runs, but they were all unearned, because the side should have been retired before they happened. It was a careless throw, carelessly muffed by Koney, that opened the door through which the visitors slammed their quartet of counters.

But the Cubs made three more runs off Rudolph before he was yanked at the end of the fourth, and those three were due to good belts and base running. Lefty George assumed the hopeless job in the fifth and held up to three hits and no runs the rest of the way.

Three Swats for Les Mann.

The effective artillery was concentrated in the middle of the Cub batting order. Mann led with three solid shots. Paskert, Merkle, Barber, and Zeider backed the major with two swats apiece. One of Barber's was a triple and one of Zeider's a double, and both of them were timely. Merkle wasted a double in the fifth.

Two were out in the first round when Mann was given a life by J. L. Smith's low throw. Before that slip could be corrected the game was gone.

Paskert singled and Mann raced to third. They pulled a double steal which scored the major. Merkle drove Paskert home with a single and went to third himself on Barber's single. Barber stole second and Zeider scored both of them, with a wallop which bounded off J. C. Smith's shins so far that Rollie made two corners on it. Killefer bumped to Rudolph for the third out.

Barber's Triple Scores Two More.

The Cubs rested one round, then attacked Rudolph hard in the third. Mann and Paskert singled with nobody out, and Barber scored them with a three bagger through Wickland. The seventh run was due to a pass, a force out, a steal by Hollocher, and Mann's second hit.

The Braves made two hits off Vaughn in five innings without getting a run across. In the sixth, Paskert gave George his life on first by a wild chuck. Herzog scratched a single off Hippo's mitt. Taggert's out advanced the runners a base each. Massey fouled out, but Wickland hit a bounder over second safely, scoring George. Zeider knocked the ball down and held Herzog on third, then tossed out Red Smith.

Cubs Worry About Salaries.

Manager Mitchell called a meeting of the Cubs before today's opening game with the Braves for the purpose of getting his players out of their slump if possible in time to keep ahead of the Giants until Sept. 1.

It came out at the meeting that in addition to being all out of pepper, the Cubs are worrying about what salary adjustment will be made by the club owners in view of Secretary Baker's ruling. The matter was discussed by the players following their skull practice, but no action was taken except to ask Business Manager Craighead to forward information regarding the intention of the Chicago club owners in the matter.

Worry About Bonuses Also.

The players naturally want to know whether salaries are to be paid in full only to Sept. 1. Also what effect the early closing will have on the bonus agreements held by some of the players. None of the men will discuss what will be done if the owners decide to stop salaries on Sept. 1.

In the Wake of the News

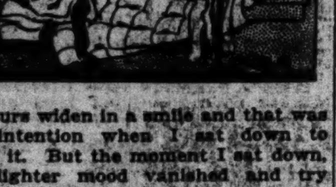
By RING W. LARDNER

THE EPISTLES OF EDNA.

Chicago, July 25.

Dear Warren:

Well, sir, I have writen it and if you think I am a perfect little f—l after you have read it, please remember, Mr. Soldier Man, that you asked me to, so it's your fault, "you see." When I read your letter saying: "Sure, shoot the poetry" I thought at first I would write some humorous little verse to make that serious old mouth of yours widen in a smile and that was my intention when I sat down to write it. But the moment I sat down, my lighter mood vanished and try though I might, I could not call it back. I am afraid I was never cut out for a "comedian," though my girl friends say my sense of humor is almost too keen sometimes and I laugh at things and see the funny side of them that seem anything but amusing to others, but when I am at my "versifying" I am such a different person that I hardly know myself and sometimes it seems like the words were being dictated to me by some mysterious outsider and that I had nothing to do with them only set them on paper.



I can't explain it exactly and I am afraid you will think I am talking like a crazy person and I am afraid you will think I am still crazier when you have read my "pome." But remember, you wanted it and as you are my "superior officer," there is nothing for me to do only "obey." You see I am beginning to talk in military terms. "I wonder why."

* *

But please, Warren, don't laugh at what I have written or I will never, never forgive you, and then what will you do? I can hear you saying: "What do I care if she ever forgives me or not, the little it." But don't you care the tiniest little speck? Please say you do anyway or I will be "broken-hearted," so there! You don't want to be a heart-breaker, do you? I'll bet you are, at that, whether you want to be or not. How many other girls are you corresponding with? That's none of my business, I know, and yet I believe a girl has a right to know things about one whom——But there, I must stop before I say something crazy.

I have talked of nothing except my poor little verses so far and you will be sick of them before you read them if I don't stop and talk about something else. Well, then, let's talk about "the weather." I am afraid, though, that the kind we have been having is not worth "discussing," though I am "disgusted" with it. There, you see I can make jokes when I get started. But seriously, hasn't it been just terrible? Or have you managed to keep cool at Camp Grant? It's hard to imagine anybody being cool these days. But then I don't suppose one ought to expect cool weather at this time of year. But Chicago has been just stifling and I can scarcely wait for August 10, when my vacation starts, though I haven't as yet made up my mind where to spend it. South Haven is dandy and I had a perfectly gorgeous time there last year, but somehow it seems so far away from "things." Is Rockford awfully hot? And are there any hotels there, not too awfully expensive?

* *

Well, d——r, I am still waiting for that picture and you haven't yet told me exactly when you think you are going away. Please tell me, for though I dread to hear it anything is better than suspense. And please don't think I am a little "it" for talking this way or for writing these little verses and if you laugh at me I will go crazy, but I guess you will think I am that already withing "going" there.

Yours (?)
EDNA.

(The inclosure):

TO A SOLDIER MAN.

The summer days are with us now,
And O! What dreams they bring
Of one I met that Saturday
So long ago, yet 'twas but spring.

But since I saw you, dear, the days
Drag by so slow, 'twould seem,
And how I long for night to come
With O! What blissful dreams.

Yes, dear, I dream of you alone,
I dream you called me "all your own,"
And that we are together, dear,
Then wake to find you are not here.

I wonder will my dreams come true
And some days I will be with you.
And then comes a thought to make me blue:
"My dreams are too good to be true."

CHARLES EVANS EQUALS RECORD

Indianapolis, Ind., July 27.—Charles (Chick) Evans, national amateur and open golf champion, this morning equaled the course record at Riverside club here when he shot a 70, four under par, in a four ball Red Cross benefit match. The other players were Warren K. Woods, Evans' partner, and Kenneth Edwards and Phil Gaudin. Several hundred dollars were raised for the Red Cross.

In the afternoon the four golfers played on the Highland club course, paired as in the morning round. Evans and Wood won the morning round, 2 up, and in the afternoon Edwards and Gaudin finished 3 up.

BOSTON'S THREE RUNS IN SEVENTH BEAT SOX, 6 TO 4

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Realizing that a pennant and a world's series were close at hand, Boston's hustling Red Sox gingered up a bit in the third combat of the series against the well worn White Sox and won with a seventh inning rally by a count of 6 to 4. Indications are Chicago's fans don't care a whoop whether Boston, Cleveland, Washington, or New York wins the flag.

However, the White Sox made quite a gallant fight against the first placers and might have won a third straight victory if it hadn't been for the prowess of Mr. Joe Bush, who not only hurled a steady game after a bad first inning but produced the staggering blow with his bat in the seventh inning.

That Fatal Seventh.

When that period arrived the White Sox were leading by a scant one run and Wallie Schang was shoved into the combat as pinch hitter for Agnew, with orders to start something. He delivered a safe poke for one base, whereupon Mr. Bush stepped up and drove a two bagger out to left center. John Collins made a frantic try for the drive and did barely reach the ball while going at top speed, but he couldn't hold it. This put Schang on third base and Joe on second, and the Sox' lead of one run wasn't worth shucks. Immediately Hooper lammed a single to right, sending his two mates home, after which the Sox crumbled.

Young Frank Shellenback was on the rubber working desperately to get back into a winning stride, but that seventh round assault drove him to cover and brought forth Dave Danforth. It was too late, and anyway the Boston gang hammered in some more for good measure.

Both Score at Start.

There was action on each side in the first. Shellenback began by walking Hooper and Truesdale, after which Strunk beat out a bunt and Ruth poled a single. Two runs were in, but Strunk had tried to go to third and J. Collins had nailed him, which made it possible for the Sox to get out with no further damage.

In their half the Sox tied it, singles being made by Murphy, J. Collins, and Weaver, while Gandil cut in with a two bagger. A couple of stolen bases, one wild throw, and one wild pitch assisted.

Shellenback led off in the fifth with a walk, but was forced by Murphy, the latter advancing on a wild pitch and scoring on E. Collins' single. That gave the Sox the lead, which they surrendered in the seventh when Bush's double was bunched with singles by Schang, Hooper, and Strunk. Boston made another in the eighth on passes to Stansbury and Schang, followed by another blow by Bush, and the Sox got one in the seventh on a pass, a single, and an error.

CUBS PURCHASE STAR INFIELDER

Infielder Charley Pick, captain of the San Francisco club of the Pacific Coast league and its leading base stealer, has been secured by the Cubs and will join Mitchell's crew in New York. Pick, who had a swatting average of .333, played third base on the coast, but is likely to get a trial at second. The Seals thought so well of him he was kept on the pay roll until sold to the Cubs at a reported price of $5,000. He is in class 4 of the draft.

VICTOR LIVES UP TO SOBRIQUET OF 'ONE ROUND' JACK

Jack Dempsey, the heavyweight, who knocked out Fred Fulton at Harrison, N. J., in one round yesterday, is some prognosticator. Just before he left for the east to train for the bout with the Rochester Giant, Dempsey, in talking with THE TRIBUNE boxing critic, said:

"It seems Fulton and a few others in the boxing game are shooting criticism at me, saying that I am piling up a record on one round knockouts by fighting easy marks; that I am 'picking 'em.' That's all wrong. I'm not picking 'em or looking for easy marks. I've instructed my manager to go out and get the best men obtainable to fight me. I don't care who they are or how big their reputations.

"Now, I want to say one thing, and that is that if Fulton thinks my one round knockouts are due to picking opponents, he is going to make a discovery when I meet him in the ring. I'm going to knock him out in one round just the same as I have my other opponents."

Look at the report of yesterday's battle and see how true was the prediction of Jack Dempsey.

Forceful Rushes of Navy Champ Beat Down McGoorty.

BY RAY PEARSON.

Fort Sheridan, Ill., July 27.—[Special.]—The navy ensign floats over the land emblematic of the middleweight championship of the United States fighting forces. As the Hun is being driven back on the western front so did Harry Greb, champion of the navy, drive Eddie McGoorty, champion of the army, back until the fall of the "army" was accomplished in a terrific ten round engagement at Fort Sheridan this afternoon. The referee's decision determined the winner, but a decision was not necessary.

Chicago fans, about 4,000 of them—there will be a lot more regretful they weren't there when they read of the battle—saw this Pittsburgh jackie for the first time. They saw a fight the equal of which seldom is seen in any ring. It was a fight for the honor of being the greatest ring man in war service of the country. It was a fight that shot the red blood in the veins to the highest pitch.

Greb Puts Up Great Fight.

In that crowd which sat in comfort in the big drill hall at the Fort there were those who gazed in wonder as the rugged Greb, always on the aggressive, tore into the army champion, shifted from side to side, and slammed both hands, fast as the piston of an engine moves, into the army sector. "That fellow's a fighting fool," shouted one of the ringsiders. Part of that is true, make no mistake about it, and that is that Greb is a fighter.

Never once in the full ten rounds of battling did the jackie ease up in his relentless attack, and it was a rough road for McGoorty to travel. That Corp. Eddie stuck as he did is a feather in his cap, for, while he was shaded, he fought a battle that left no mark of disgrace. There were times in that struggle for service honors that it seemed the heavy and everlasting bombardment would result in a knockout. But those who thought this outcome certain did not reckon on Eddie McGoorty. Laced to the body and head, his left eye nearly closed, the corporal fought as only a real fighter fights in the effort to turn the tide running against him. He failed because he faced a younger and better man.

McGoorty on Defense.

There is not much that need be said about the way the navy champion fought. He fought the one way he knows best, an aggressive, never ceasing battle. But with McGoorty it was different. The corporal is a boxer, skilled in the art of offense as well as in defense. But for the greater part of the time he was in the ring this afternoon he was forced to fall back on his defense. There were times when he called on the reserve in the vain hope that he might connect with Greb's jaw with his famous left hook. Few times did he land, and then not with sufficient force to jar his rival.

When he found his chances lessening McGoorty turned to blocking, covering, and footwork and gave an exhibition which made the fans take notice. It was his masterful defensive tactics that enabled him to hear the gong at the end of ten rounds.

First Round Even One.

There was not a moment in the ten rounds that wasn't full of action. They fought an even first round, McGoorty's cleverness offsetting Greb's aggressive attack. Eddie landed his only solid left hook to the jaw in this round. It stung Navy Harry, but didn't halt his attack. Greb's aggressiveness began to wear down McGoorty as early as the second round, in which the navy champion took the lead.

The third was the roughest round of the ten for the corporal. Greb rushed at top speed, smashing punches to Eddie's head. Some of them were blocked, others weren't, and Eddie by protective tactics managed to stick out the session, but he went to his corner leg weary and with a left eye bunged up.

The fourth was another Greb round, but McGoorty recuperated in the minute's rest and came back for an even break in the next. Again Greb forged ahead in the sixth, and the seventh was another navy round. Then the jackie made certain of victory by grabbing the shade in the last three rounds and was rewarded when the referee raised his arm as winner.

Many Types Present.

The crowd consisted of many types. The dyed in the wool business man fan was a ringsider; so were the regulars, the "boxing talent," which included present day coin earners in pugilism, along with a lot of old timers who long ago tossed off the padded mitts for keeps.

The crowd color was furnished by a band of feminine fanettes who were exclusively seated in the east gallery of the drill hall, in which the battles were staged.

The coin gleaned from today's show, which amounted to about $3,000, goes to the athletic fund and it will be appreciated, for the boys are lacking of equipment. The Fort Sheridan Reveille also issued a fight special.

DEMPSEY, AS METEOR IN RING FIRMAMENT, CALLED A CHAMPION

WHEN William Harrison Dempsey, known in pugilism as Jack Dempsey, cracked Fred Fulton on the chin for a knockout after twenty-three seconds of fighting in the first round at Harrison, N. J., yesterday, he established himself as the real heavyweight champion of the world. Jess Willard still retains the crown, but as the chances of Willard ever returning to the ring to defend his honors are slim, Dempsey, though technically minus the title, will be considered champion by fair minded boxing critics.

There are few boxers who have had such a meteoric rise as this young Dempsey, who is called "the big kid" by his intimates. In less than three years of fighting Dempsey, who is 22 years old, has come from nowhere to his present high station in pugilism.

* *

Jack started his boxing career less than three years ago. His initial performance was a one round knockout of an opponent named Kid Hancock. In the last year the new star has performed the feat of knocking out no less than ten opponents in one round, including his victory of yesterday over Fulton. The figure one has played a big part in Dempsey's rise.

In the list of Dempsey's victims leading up to his sudden triumph over the Rochester Giant are several noted heavyweights, including Joe Bonds, Andre Anderson, John Lester Johnson, Willie Meehan, Bob McAllister, Gunboat Smith, Carl Morris, Jim Flynn, Bill Brennan, Billy Miske, and Porky Flynn in the order named.

In the record of Dempsey there is only one dark spot. It was placed there by Jim Flynn, the Pueblo fireman. It happened when Dempsey was young and inexperienced in boxing. They fought at Salt Lake City. Flynn, with a punch to the jaw, knocked out Dempsey in the first round.

That defeat was wiped out when Dempsey met Flynn for the second time at Fort Sheridan several months ago and knocked him out in one round.

THROUGH THE EDITOR'S SPECS

By HARVEY WOODRUFF

SECRETARY BAKER'S modification of the "work or fight" ruling, as applied to baseball players, so that it becomes effective from Sept. 1, will be accepted as an effort to rectify an apparent discrimination against diamond performers, as compared with actors, movie players, and several other classes which the public has been prone to think were fully as nonessentional as ball players.

In announcing his decision Secretary Baker makes the point that the "work or fight" ruling is intended to augment the fighting forces by removing men from nonessential labor. It happens that baseball players are young, mostly of draft age, and paid for their services. Therefore continuation of their work of baseball at a time when the national demand is for man power is not a wholesome example, in the opinion of Secretary Baker, although he strongly approves baseball as a "wholesome recreation."

* *

This view generally is shared even by lovers of the game. The manner of demise meted out to baseball brought the only protests—that it has been treated unfairly. Now a decent time is to be allowed to secure active and honorary pallbearers.

As a matter of fact, most of the damage has been done so far as the club owners' coin boxes is concerned. Attendance has dribbled away since the original decision. The month of grace allowed will be anti-climax except for the leaders. Even the world series, if held, will lack its former glamour.

Somebody has messed the affair. Either organized baseball muffed its chance to learn the real wishes of the administration, or was misinformed by unofficial statements, or else the war department formed a snap judgment without considering the consequences, which caused a modification and time extension of the order after the official brief filed by the baseball men had been perused by the secretary.

* *

Baseball temporarily has suffered by somebody's error, but the national pastime has endured too many hard knocks from within its own ranks from time to time to be permanently affected by the present unusual crisis. Its sponsors owe it to the game to see that no more mistakes are made in closing up the season or in formulating plans for 1919.

WILLARD WANTS CHANCE TO MEET DEMPSEY IN RING

Lawrence, Kas., July 27.—"I'd like to fight Dempsey," was the first comment of Jess Willard, heavyweight champion, when he learned the outcome of the Dempsey-Fulton fight at Newark tonight.

"I am not surprised at the result," he continued, "for all you have to do is to hit Fulton to have him down."

Willard declared his belief there would be no more major boxing events until after the war.

"Dempsey has a rough road between him and the championship," Willard asserted. "He is not going to win the championship in twenty-three seconds. No, not in an hour and twenty-three seconds.

"Just as soon as the war is over I am going to take on Dempsey, or any other claimant. I have not retired from the ring, and I have no intention of doing anything of the sort."

ONE FUSILLADE WRECKS FRED'S TITLE CHANCES

Right Swing to Jaw Ends Fight; Jack Not Hit Once.

"Tribune" Decisions

Decisions of "The Tribune" fight representatives are:
At Harrison, N. J.—Jack Dempsey knocked out Fred Fulton [1]; Jack White and Benny Becker fought a draw [3].
At Fort Sheridan—Harry Greb beat Eddie McGoorty [10].

Harrison, N. J., July 27.—[Special.]—Jack Dempsey of California punched his way to pugilistic fame at the Federal league baseball park here this afternoon when he knocked out Fred Fulton of Minnesota, claimant of the heavyweight title, with a terrific right swing to the jaw when the fight was only twenty-three seconds old. The finish came as a sensational surprise to the crowd, for it was really a one punch fight.

Fulton did not once hit Dempsey with a blow. When the bout started Fulton, smiling and confident, stuck out his long left arm and tried to jam Dempsey, but Jack cracked him with a hard right over the heart. Fulton was hurt by this blow, and Dempsey went tearing after him. A left hook to the jaw tottered the big plasterer a bit, and when Dempsey had rushed Fulton over near the ropes Dempsey's right arm swung high and came down with a terrific crash on Fulton's jaw.

Jack Like a Terry McGovern.

The kangaroolike Fulton crumpled up and sagged to the floor, his head falling over the lower rope. His eyes closed and there was a look of pain over his pale face. Dempsey stood off from him, the typical picture of the master fighter. There was the cold, sneering look of the primitive man on his face. He was every inch the conqueror, his teeth set and his fists clinched, ready to spring at his antagonist if he should try to get up.

Dempsey fought like an enlarged edition of Terry McGovern. At the tap of the bell he rushed at Fulton, determined to make a fight of it. He cracked him with the knockout wallop before Fulton knew where he was. Fulton started out with the idea of boxing Dempsey and holding him off until he got a line on his tactics. This plan failed because Dempsey jumped into the scrap from the first and didn't give Fulton even time to think.

Fulton Knocked Out Cold.

Fulton made desperate efforts to get up, but he couldn't move his giant frame more than an inch or so from the floor, and then sank back. His manager, Mike Collins, begged and implored him to get up, but Fulton was out cold and done for.

The knockout was one of the quickest on record for an important bout. It takes rank with the quick finish of the Dal Hawkins-Solly Smith bout at Carson City, Nev., when Hawkins knocked out his man with one punch.

Small Crowd Starts Riot.

The quick ending to the mill was the end of a day's boxing carnival which seemed doomed to disappointment. The crowd was disappointingly small and the lack of proper police control resulted in a general riot and stampede, during which the spectators all climbed around into the high priced seats as they pleased. At one time the confusion was so bad that Jack Curley, who promoted the affair, threatened to stop the show. He was hissed and hooted by the crowd and decided to go on with it.

The affair was a financial failure as well as a disappointment as a boxing show and was a bad start for New Jersey's revival of country-wide boxing bouts.

Ringside Notables Missing.

The show was slow in getting under way because the crowd was as slow in gathering. At 5:30 o'clock the ball park was only half filled and the expected multitude was showing up at the turnstiles somewhat tardily. The majority of the dyed in the wool fight fans must have gone to the seashore or the mountains for the week end, as there was an absence of the familiar faces generally seen around the ringside at a big bout.

Bob Chandler, ex-sheriff of Dutchess county, was in a ringside box, and so was Foxhall Keene. Broadway's contingent was led by George M. Cohan, Sam Harris, Joe Weber, and others were there also. Even the bleacher seats were only half filled and it was plain the bout did not command the sensational interest the promoters expected.

Pat Powers, the old six day bike promoter and baseball man, held a public reception and shook hands with every one in the expensive seats.

White-Becker Bout Stopped.

The semi-final brought together Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley White, and Benny Becker of Cincinnati. It started out so tame the crowd requested Curley to send them out of the ring. Curley finally stopped the affair in the third round, not because it was so bad, but because he wanted to put on the big bout at 7 o'clock as he had promised.

JOHNSON SAYS WORLD SERIES WILL BE STAGED

Plans Held Up Pending Rearrangement of Schedules.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

A world's series between the pennant winners of the American and National leagues, or rather between the teams which are ahead when the season is closed to comply with the work or fight order, is practically assured, but until the major magnates arrange many details regarding the remainder of the season it will not be known just when the big series will take place.

This information was given out by President Johnson of the American league upon his return to Chicago yesterday. The A. L. boss stated he would call a meeting of his club owners perhaps within three or four days, and he indicated that a meeting of the National league men might be held at the same time, so the matter of a closing date and the beginning of the world's series could be handled jointly.

Baker's Ruling Not Clear.

"There are many difficulties to overcome in winding up baseball on Sept. 1," said Johnson, "and we will have to meet them as best we can, though it may be impossible to deal fairly with every one of the clubs. Just at present we don't know exactly how to interpret Secretary Baker's ruling.

"For instance, he stated that the work or fight order would apply to ball players of draft age from Sept. 1 on. It so happens that Sept. 1 falls on Sunday and that the following day is Labor day, a legal holiday. As yet we don't know that Secretary Baker meant for ball players to quit playing ball on Aug. 31. It would hardly be possible for them to begin their employment in other lines until Tuesday, Sept. 3. Those two intervening days, a Sunday and a holiday, of course, make a big difference to us.

No Further Reprieve Sought.

"It may be that the feeling of Mr. Baker regarding that point may be expressed within a day or two, which would enable the club owners to lay their plans accordingly. There is no intention on our part of seeking further reprieve. Whether the world's series will be played before Sept. 1 is a matter to be determined at our meetings.

"If the world's series must be completed before that time the season will have to be ended some days in advance, possibly as early as Aug. 22. This would break into the middle of the eastern trip by the western teams of the American league and middle of the western trip of the eatern teams of the National. It also would give the eastern clubs of the American and the western clubs of the National an advantage of many games on their home grounds.

Fair Arrangement Difficult.

"Besides those conditions, it might give one club an advantage of being booked for a series against a weak team while a rival club for the pennant would have to play another strong team. It is quite likely an effort will be made to equalize things as far as possible up to the date finally named as the closing one. Those are matters to be decided at the meetings."

While there were some reports that the regular season would continue until Sept. 1 or possibly Sept. 2, the latter being a holiday, and that the world's series would take place after that, such a plan is not likely to be attempted, as the players of pennant teams are supposed to be at work in essential employment after Sept. 1, as well as the players of other clubs.

NO BIG SERIES, TENER BELIEVES

Salisbury Beach, Mass., July 27.—"I do not think any world's series will be played this year," said John K. Tener, president of the National league, discussing Secretary of War Baker's decision that the work or fight ruling would not apply to professional baseball players until Sept. 1. Tener was at his summer home here.

Tener also expressed the opinion that the major leagues would not continue baseball after Sept. 1. He said: "Players affected by the rule likely will begin at once to seek useful occupations before that date. Our league will fill in with such players as we can obtain, but it is doubtful if we can go on after Sept. 1. League action, however, may be necessary to determine this."

Play Schedule Games Until First of September

Cincinnati, O., July 27.—Discussing the baseball situation brought about by the ruling of the war department on the work or fight order, August Herrmann, chairman of the national commission, today said that so far as he knew the various clubs will simply play out their schedules to the appointed end, and that it may not be necessary to make any new arrangements. "I think," Herrmann said, "that baseball should wind up with a big jollification on Sept. 1 and on the 2d—Labor day."

As to the world series, the chances are the games will be played, but this question is to be decided at a meeting to be held three or four days hence, the chairman said.

New York Teams to Play Sunday Games in Newark

New York, July 27.—An agreement was reached today between the National and American leagues and the International league under which New York teams of the major leagues will play Sunday games at the former Newark Federal league park at Harrison, N. J., beginning Aug. 4. Major league games will be preceded by International league games played either by the Newark or Jersey City teams, the minor league clubs to get a share of the receipts.

The major league clubs will make use of these Sunday dates to play games which will be moved forward under the shortened schedule.

GARDEN CITY BEATS SEVENTH REGIMENT IN BINGLEFEST, 6-5

Garden City ball nine handed the Seventh Regiment team from Great Lakes Naval station a 6 to 5 setback at Garden City park. The home team got away to a three run lead in the first when Fenton and Scanlon singled, Lee Kavanaugh tripled, and Englehart doubled. The sailors tied the score in the seventh, but the home boys went ahead in the eighth, netting two runs on three hits and a pass. The jackies looked dangerous in the ninth, but Gilligan replaced Dale and killed off the rally.

Norman pitched the greater part of the game for the jackies and hurled nice ball. Merz started the fracas, but was yanked in the fourth. Score:

Notes

BOSTON, Mass., July 27.—[Special.]—Three more games here Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Two double plays on each side helped the hurlers out of difficulties.

Manager Mitchell did not go to Montreal, but remained here to look for an essential job, and incidentally learn if there were any good players looking for a chance to play until Sept. 1.

A blazing sun and stiff wind made the fielding of flies difficult, for the Braves' field is laid out badly enough when there is only the sun to contend with.

Some delay was incurred in rounding up enough Cubs who had permission from their draft boards to leave the United States for the Montreal jump, but a sufficient number was recruited before train time.

Secretary Seyes piloted a squad of Cubs to Montreal tonight for an exhibition game with a squad of Braves in the Canadian city. They will return Monday, spending twenty-four hours on the rails to keep the engagement.

NOTES

The final game with the Red Sox will be played today. Probably it will be the final of the year for Boston in this city.

Although it was Saturday and the weather was of the best, there was only a fair week day crowd present, probably not more than 4,500 persons. Either Chicago's loyal fans are too busy or have lost interest in the Sox.

Everett Scott received a knockout bump from Shellenback in the fifth when the latter was forced at second. Big Shelly poked his skull into Scottie's eye and he took a count of about 200, but finally revived and continued to play.

Umpire Dinneen, who worked behind the bat, hinted that soon after the season ends he may be in France. Bill stated he is willing to enter Y. M. C. A. work if he can see his way clear to feed the family. Right after the season ends he expects to take part in an athletic carnival which may be staged in several cities, the idea being to engage only old time athletes of all classes. The proceeds are to raise a fund for athletic equipment for the soldiers and sailors.

How to reach speedway—Special trains on the Illinois Central from Randolph and Van Buren street stations, beginning at noon; special service on Metropolitan "L" and Aurora, Chicago and Elgin; motor busses from State and Adams streets.

By automobile—A good way to avoid the Sunday traffic congestion is to drive west in Washington boulevard to Oak Park avenue, south to Twelfth street, and west to the speedway.

Racing starts at 3 p. m.

BY SHEPPARD BUTLER.

An even half dozen of the best automobile racing drivers now before the public will stage what should be a top notch speed carnival at the Chicago speedway this afternoon.

Except in the case of Ira Vail, a belated entry, the rivals are here at the express invitation of the speedway management. The contest is not to be the usual free for all affair, the promotors in this case preferring to limit the field to the men best known for fast performance.

Decide Winner on Points.

By agreement among the drivers, there will be five short races, at two, ten, twenty, thirty and fifty miles. The winner of each dash will be awarded six points, the second man five, and so on, the man who winds up with the largest total being victor for the day.

The purse, originally $25,000, is made up in a fashion new to automobile racing. Each of the contestants has put up $2,000 of his own money, and the management has supplied the rest.

Vail's unexpected entry, to which the others have consented, adds his stake to the amount, so that it is now $27,000. Of this total $17,000 will go to the winner, $5,000 for second place, $3,000 for third, $1,500 for fourth, and $500 for fifth.

Rivalry Is Bitter.

Keen—even bitter—rivalry has developed among the drivers, at least three of whom claim to have, in each case, the fastest racing car in America. That more than one speedway record will go into the discard seems certain.

There was a flurry of excitement in the promoters' headquarters yesterday when a report went out that District Attorney C. F. Clyne had ordered the speedway seized and the races stopped because $3,500 war taxes on the receipts at the last race had not been paid. Officials of the Speedway Park association hurriedly got into touch with the federal authorities and cleared up the matter, explaining that the failure to pay the tax was due to a misunderstanding as to when the money should have been turned over to the government.

Because the races are to be short ones, Dario Resta rules as favorite. The champion of 1915 and 1916 has not made much of a killing this year with his new car, for it has almost invariably broken down before reaching the finish line in races of any great length. In short spurts, however, it has shown terrific speed—winning, for example, the ten mile Chicago handicap last month at an average of nearly 108 miles an hour.

De Palma's Car Fast.

Ralph De Palma and his Packard have shown themselves of consistent championship caliber wherever they have been able to keep going without too many pit stops. They have two 1918 victories to their credit—the New York and Cincinnati races, both at 100 miles—and have broken several records in individual performances, notably a two mile lap turned at the time of the Chicago derby, at 116 miles an hour.

Louis Chevrolet, the 1917 champion, won this year's 100 mile Chicago derby and the 112 mile race at Uniontown, Pa. His forte is keeping up a steady grind with his light Frontenac, mile after mile, without ever stopping at the pits. Whether he will develop unbeatable prowess in the short dashes against Resta and De Palma remains to be seen.

Duray's Laurels European.

Of the others, Arthur Duray's claim to be called a champion is unquestioned, but it is based on a long string of European victories rather than on his performance on American speedways. Since he came to this country, on leave from the French army, he has shown a tendency to punish his car, driving it too hard at the banked turns and usually putting it out of commission.

Ralph Mulford and Ira Vail, both members of last year's Hudson racing team, are track veterans, 'though both are young, and each has a sizeable list of speedway victories to his credit. Mulford has switched to a Frontenac, which he has rebuilt himself, almost from stem to stern, but Vail is still handling one of the Hudsons.

Change in Official Staff.

An eleventh hour change in the list of race officials became necessary in the afternoon. E. C. Patterson, who had been appointed referee, found himself suddenly called away on army service. At the same time Fred J. Wagner arrived unexpectedly from the east, announcing that he understood he was to officiate as starter. John De Long, therefore, was switched from the post of starter to that of referee.

All-Star Soccer Team vs. Jackies at Ravinia Aug. 4

The Illinois State Soccer association will play a team from the Great Lakes at Ravinia park on Aug. 4. The match was originally planned for this afternoon, but was set back one week. Ralph Bard, who has been arranging games of various kinds for the benefit of the navy boys, asked the soccer officials to stage a game.

'ATTA' BOY, OLLIE

Veteran Announcer at Athletic Contests Joins National Army.

CAPT. OLLIE STEELE, whose characteristic method of announcing results through a megaphone have been a feature of all club and college athletic meets held in Chicago for the last fifteen years, has been called to service as an officer of the United States guards, national army, and ordered to report at Fort McPherson, Ga.

CAPT. OLLIE STEELE

Steele's vogue as an announcer dates back to the days when George Siler was refereeing boxing bouts. In addition to the club and college events he officiated at the water carnival several years ago, the Olympic games tests, and was one of the first volunteers to assist when THE TRIBUNE fostered amateur athletics with baseball, skating, and track athletic meets.

Ollie, to be frank, is considerably past the draft age, but left a prosperous business to offer his services.

MISS ROSENTHAL GETS CARD OF 84

Newton, Mass., July 27.—A brilliant 84 by Miss Elaine Rosenthal of Chicago was the feature of the Red Cross exhibition golf match at the Braeburn Country club, where Miss Rosenthal and Perry Adair of Atlanta defeated Miss Alexa Stirling, national woman's champion, and Bobby Jones, both of Atlanta, by 12 points. The best ball score gave Miss Rosenthal and Adair a 5 and 3 win.

Miss Rosenthal's round is one of the best ever shot by a woman over the difficult fairways at Braeburn. Jones' card was 87, and Miss Stirling took a 92, because of her poor putting. Adair got around in 80, having two twos going out. Miss Stirling opened with a three on the 347 yard first hole, when she sank a twenty-five foot putt.

IRELAND MEETS SCOTLAND TODAY IN RED X MATCH

Red Cross Match

Place—Ridgemoor Country club.

Players—Doyle and Boyd vs. Hutchinson and MacDonald. Special match, Corbett vs. Tinney, at 1 o'clock.

Auto—Sheridan or Sacramento to Lawrence, west to end of street, north to Gunderson, west to clubhouse.

BY JOE DAVIS.

The Red Cross match billed for this afternoon at the Ridgemoor Country club is a distinct novelty in that it will be Ireland against Scotland. Pat Doyle of the Deal Golf club of New Jersey and Tom Boyd of Fox Hills, Staten Island, will oppose Jock Hutchinson and Bob MacDonald.

The eastern players are both from the "ould sod." Doyle comes from Dublin, his home clubs being Dollymount and Portmarnock, while Boyd hails from Armagh and the Greenore club.

Preceding the big match James J. Corbett, former heavyweight champion, and Frank Tinney will meet in a nine hole contest, which Victor Moore will referee. Rules for this battle have been made more elastic than those for the big professional match, and Moore expects to render more decisions than the Supreme court does in a year. Tinney is a clever polo player and would like to play on horseback if the rules permitted it, but nags are "taboo" on a golf course.

Doyle Stars in East.

Doyle has a fine reputation in the east. He won the professional tournament at Jacksonville last winter, and in the tournament at Asheville finished in a tie for second place with Fred McLeod at 278, Jock Hutchinson winning with a record score of 276. He was runner up at Augusta. In 1916 he tied with Mike Brady for the Massachusetts championship, losing in the playoff and being operated on for appendicitis the following day.

Boyd is a remarkably steady player and while he has not been fortunate enough to win a big title he has been in the money a number of times.

Plan for Big Crowd.

After a round of the course on Friday, the eastern players expressed the belief it would take a score of under sixty-nine to win. The club has made preparations to entertain a big crowd and extends a cordial invitation to the public. Members will furnish machines to convey visitors from the end of the car line to the clubhouse.

Two golf balls autographed by President Wilson will be auctioned by Felix Streyckmans, who also will sell the caddy privileges. A band from the Great Lakes will play. President Charles F. Thompson of the Western Golf association will referee the principal match.

THIRD HOLE AT INDIAN HILL HONORED

BY GEORGE A. O'NEIL.
[Lake Shore Country club.]

IF there was any golfer in the United States twelve months ago who did not know Jock Hutchinson, there is probably no such person now, for Jock has been playing steadily every week in Red Cross matches throughout the country. The club distinguished by the choice of this star golfer, whose judgment, of course, falls little short of his astonishing skill in play, may surely feel highly complimented.

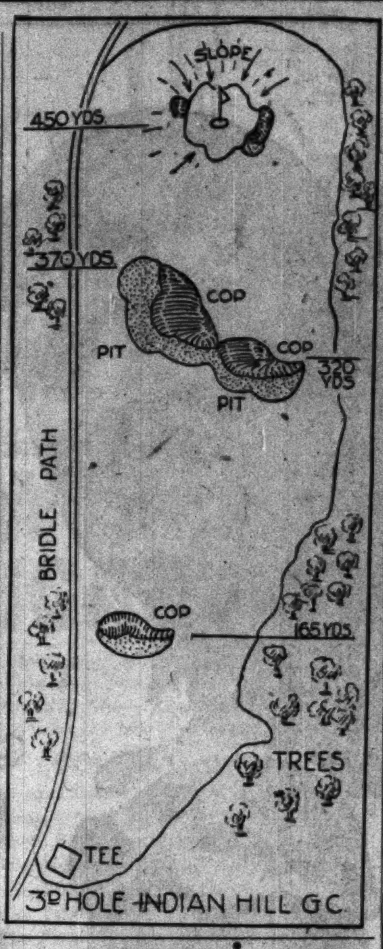
During last winter—as in previous winters—the hotels in Florida put up large purses which attracted the best golf talent from all parts of the country. In these tournaments, when Jock was not the winner, he was at any rate always one whom the professionals had to reckon with. Taking the tournaments in regular order, at Deland he finished third; at Ballaire, in the west coast championship, first; at Fort Myers, in the southern Florida championship, first; at St. Augustine, third.

* *

As the Florida season waned Jock fared farther north. Asheville and Camden saw him lead the field, while at Pinehurst, in the north and south championship, fourth place fell to his lot.

During the present summer he has won a great many Red Cross matches. Paired with Chick Evans at French Lick, he won from Jim Barnes and Gil Nichols. At Windsor Golf club he and Bob McDonald won from Chick Evans and Warren Wood. At Detroit he and Mike Brady were successful against Chick Evans and James Standish. At Cincinnati, with Bob McDonald, he defeated Walter Hagen and Jimmie Simpson, and at Olympia fields he and Bob McDonald again defeated Chick Evans and Warren Wood. At Lake Shore Country club, in the famous tie between Jock and Bob MacDonald versus Chick Evans and Jim Barnes, Jock scored a sensational 69, setting a new record for the course.



With such a record this golfer is just as capable of picking a par hole as of playing one.

* *

The course from which Jock makes his selection is conceded by the majority of experts to be the one affording the best test of golf around Chicago. The special hole chosen is the third hole at Indian Hill.

The hole measures 450 yards. A long drive obtains the advantage of a slight roll about 200 yards from the tee, as there is at this point a slope toward the green. From here the successful driver has a full view of the beautiful green. Slightly raised at the back, with a large sand pit paneling at its right hand side and a small sand pit guarding its left end, the green, for all its beauty, looms up as a very hazardous second shot.

But this position of vantage is not attained without peril even by the long driver. To the left of the fairway, 165 yards from the tee, a raised sand trap lies in wait for the hooked drive, while the fairway itself is crossed diagonally by a huge sand trap and bunker which begin on the right hand side 320 yards from the tee and run to a point on the left about 370 yards from the tee. If the drive is not well placed to the right center, two very fine shots are necessary to carry this trap and bunker.

* *

The hole is laid out through an avenue of trees, which accentuates the narrowness of the course, although there is in fact ample space to avoid criticism of the hole on that ground.

During the professional team match between teams captained by George Simpson and Joe Roseman, Bob MacDonald, playing in a foursome with Jock Hutchinson against Jack Burke and George Trunbull, laid his second near enough up to hole a birdie. A three on this hole is not often duplicated.

WHY HUNS RUN: TRAINING CAMP BOUTS REASON

24,000 Blackhawk Boys in Weekly Matches; Not a Shirker.

BY RAY PEARSON.

Twelve thousand fights—every one of them a real fight with the padded mitts—is the record established for one week at Camp Grant. That is some record, as well as a boost for the sport which has been hampered for years in many states by adverse legislation. The khaki clad boys at Camp Grant are fighters, every one of them. They don't want fellows that won't fight at Grant.

The rules and regulations for boxing at cantonments have seen the light of print, so there is nothing particularly new along those lines, but at Camp Grant there is considerable "inside stuff." A little talk recently with Fred Dyer, boxing instructor, revealed something about the boxing system and the results obtained at Rockford.

All Learn to Use Fists.

For one thing Dyer imparted the information that every man at Camp Grant must be a boxer. As at many other camps, the value of boxing in connection with learning how to use a bayonet has been recognized. Nearly every movement in boxing is employed in bayonet drill. The matter of quick thinking is not overlooked, for quick thinking is required in boxing, probably more than in any other game. The fellow that can think quickly and put his thoughts into action with speed is the one who is going to outthink the Hun when it comes to hand to hand fighting.

"Not long ago the depot brigade, consisting of some 20,000 to 24,000 men, was given the initiation into boxing," said Dyer. "That meant that every one of these soldiers received instruction. The instruction consisted of showing the men how to stand when boxing; how to jab with the left hand; how to hit with the right; how to block, etc. That took up from one-half to three quarters of an hour each day.

Don Gloves in a Week.

"But that was only the start. Assistant instructors who are adept in boxing were on the job, and the first week was spent in this sort of instruction. The next week things were different. Then began the business of donning the gloves and fighting. That meant that every man was to scrap two rounds with an opponent. It didn't mean box, it meant fight, and it was up to the men to make good on all they had learned of the art, or take a lacing.

"Just imagine bouts being staged in thirty-four rings at one time, and it is easy to understand what is being done in the sport at Camp Grant. These rings of course are not regular rings but an improvised sort, being formed by soldiers. The boys battle two rounds, if there isn't a knockout, or a referee doesn't stop a one-sided contest. Two pairs of boxers were in the ring at one time. As quickly as one pair fought a round the other pair went into action, and it was fight every second. That was the way things were run in that week of 12,000 bouts."

Check Up the Sidesteppers.

Perhaps one might imagine that some of the soldiers don't box at Grant, but dismiss that thought. The name of every boxer is taken the minute he starts boxing and the record is kept. These names are gone over with the top sergeant of the different companies and those who have not had the gloves on are quickly discovered. After that no time is lost in notifying the boys who haven't boxed to "get busy."

After the first week of instruction an assistant instructor takes hold of the men of some four companies, approximating 1,500 men. There are six assistant instructors at Camp Grant. It means some task for one instructor to handle 1,500 men, but it has been done in a most satisfactory manner, according to Dyer.

Amateurs Don't Meet Pros.

Grant boasts in its ranks a number of professional boxers of class, including Eddie McGoorty, Andre Anderson, and others. But these "pros" are not permitted to scrap the amateurs. McGoorty spends considerable time teaching the boys how to handle their fists.

MOVIES OF BOUT FOR WAR CAUSES

New York, July 27.—Moving pictures taken of the Fulton-Dempsey eight round bout will be turned over to the Washington authorities and the proceeds devoted to war funds. The scrap, at Harrison, N. J., last night, drew about the biggest crowd since the Willard-Moran fight, promoters estimated.

D. O'Leary and O'Mahoney in Training for Long Walk

Dan O'Leary and Pat O'Mahoney are in training for their eight mile walk on Aug. 18. Dan is 77 and O'Mahoney 55. Away back in 1863 Dan walked a match in Ireland against O'Mahoney's father and on that day the present Pat was born. Now fifty-five years later Dan meets the son. The race is to be eight miles and the prize $5. The race which Dan walked with O'Mahoney's father was the eight miles between Roscarberry and Clonakilty, Ireland. This time the place of meeting has not yet been agreed upon.

SOMETHING ABOUT "YALLER" PERCH FISHING.

The common yellow or ringed perch—lake perch we call 'em in Chicago—is one of the most popular of fishes. Thousands of anglers who have never seen a trout or muskellunge and who have only a passing acquaintance with that knight in green armor, the black bass, know and love the perch as a most willing biter and a welcome, toothsome bit in the pan.

As Thoreau says: "It is one of the handsomest and most regularly formed of our fishes. It is a true fish, such as the angler loves to put into his basket or hang at the top of his willow twig, on shady afternoons along the banks of the stream."

Like the other friend of our youth, the bullhead, the perch is a true democrat, who does not scan a boy's tackle to see if it is expensive before taking the hook. Some uneducated anglers speak slightingly of the perch, saying that it is "a boy's fish," which is true enough. Whoever fishes for trout is a boy, regardless of how many winters he has seen come and go, there being four distinct varieties of boys who fish for perch—young and old boys and young and old tomboys—and if we were a fish we certainly would feel flattered to be thus honored.

* *

The perch spawns in the spring, laying ribbonlike strips of eggs that adhere to weeds or other floating matter and either hatch of their own accord or become food for birds or other fishes.

The eggs hatch in less than two weeks and the young fishes are self-reliant little rascals—if they weren't the perch tribe would soon die out. From babyhood to ripe old age the perch has one means of defense—needle sharp back fins, which he keeps erect and cleared for action whenever danger is near—and for this reason predatory fish do not prey upon them as much as they do other species.

Large pike and pickerel when driven by hunger will eat them, but they take diligent care to swallow them head first, and for this reason, when using a perch for bait, it is a good plan to clip off the back fin—a stunt well known to I. Walton and other early anglers.

* *

From the time he breaks through the egg until he becomes golden brown in some one's skillet or is captured by a U boat pike, his principal trait is greed, which accounts for his popularity among anglers. The perch makes no pretenses and is not subject to the temperamental moods that characterize the bass, trout, and muskie—drop a bait in the neighborhood of a perch and he grabs it. And he is not so all fired particular as to what the bait is, and in his hurry he often will snap at a bare hook. His preference, however, is for small shiners, but he is also fond of baby bass and the spawn and young of ciscos.

Perch travel in schools and love to loaf around piers, and where one is caught there are probably others around who will soon discover your bait—the best attraction for these fish is plenty of baited hooks. Therefore the wise angler does not look upon a brother fisherman as a rival, but rather as an ally, making perch fishing the most sociable of all angling.

* *

No territory of equal size affords entertainment and fish frys to as many anglers as the Chicago lake front. Here on any bright day in the spring and summer you can find thousands of happy boys, of both sexes, and all ages, "snaking" out perch and ciscos and once in a while a larger fish. Many of these anglers use a throw line or trolley with a number of hooks, but the majority use a cane pole, a cotton or linen line, and a No. 8 hook baited with a small lake shiner.

Next to the shiner the favorite lure here is a peeled crawfish tail. They simply take a crawfish, break off its fleshy tail, remove the outer husk, and put the tender flesh on the hook. Those who use worms with any success scour them. That is, they dig their worms about a week in advance and keep them in damp moss, which removes all earthy matter and toughens and brightens them.

JACKIE STARS IN TITLE SWIMS

Next Saturday will be another big swimming day in the lagoon at Lincoln park, when the Central A. A. U. championships for men and women are to be staged under the auspices of the Lincoln Park Boat club. The races are scheduled to start at 2 o'clock, and will be featured by star swimmers from Great Lakes Training station. The inauguration of swimming championships in the lagoon recently, when the Hawaiian trio, Kahanamoku, Kruger, and Lane, were performers, has resulted in the arrangement of splendid facilities for swimming events.

President Charles A. Dean of the National and Central A. A. U, and J. A. Hadwiger, president of the Lincoln Park club, announce the following program of events:

Four oared shell race, 100 yard free style swim for men, canoe tilting, tub race, night shirt race, 100 yard breast stroke for women, war canoe race, comedy four oared shell race, 100 yard free style swim for women, eight oared shell race, 880 yard free style swim for men.

Among the Great Lakes stars listed to compete are Perry McGillivray, who recently defeated Duke Kahanamoku at 220 yards; Buddy Wallen, Herman Laubis, Clark Leach, and others. Topp, the 17 year old Chicago Athletic club sensation, also will compete, and Seigel of the I. A. C. is expected to file an entry.

Gold, silver, and bronze medals will be awarded. Entries close four days before the date of the races.

COXSWAIN NINE, 9; HARVESTERS, 3.

The coxswain's school nine from Great Lakes Naval station administered a 9 to 3 defeat to International Harvesters at Glenwood Park yesterday, the ball game being the feature of the annual outing of the McCormick employés. A twenty-five piece band accompanied the sailor ball players.

CHICAGO LANDS TWO GOLD PRIZES IN ROQUE EVENTS

Walker Wins in Class One and Young Sime in Class Three.

Chicago roque players won two of the four medals competed for in the seventh annual championship of the American Roque league, which closed at Washington park yesterday. H. O. Walker of this city won the gold medal denoting the divisional championship in class 1 and Herbert Sime, a schoolboy, made roque history when he won the medal in class 3 without a single defeat, although only 14 years old.

The diamond medal, emblematic of the year's supremacy in the champions' division, was carried off by F. C. Turner, Pasadena, Cal., who was not beaten in eight straight games. Dr. J. P. Shelley, Oxford, Ind., cinched the class 2 title by last Thursday and his medal was forwarded.

Good Crowd at Matches.

The closing matches of the tourney were watched by 200 spectators, an indication of leaping popularity for the game.

C. G. Carlson, machinist's mate from Great Lakes Naval Training station, missed the title in class 1 by four scanty points, making an excellent bid for the honor after losing two matches on his first day of competition. He had 231 points; Walker, the winner, totaled 235. In number of games won Walker had a clear supremacy. Yesterday's summaries:

Champion division—F. C. Turner, Pasadena, Cal., beat F. H. Selden, Kansas City, Mo., 32—22. Selden beat H. E. Lyman, Topeka, Kas., 32—27.

First division—W. H. Hoagland, Peoria, Ill., beat H. S. Hanna, Chicago, 32—28; H. O. Walker, Chicago, beat Hoagland, 32—23. C. G. Carlson, Great Lakes Naval station, beat Hoagland, 32—4. J. E. Jones, Chicago, beat J. C. Lathrop, Chicago, 32—21. Jones beat Hoagland, 32—4. Carlson beat Jones, 32—26. Jones beat W. T. Thomson, Chicago, 32—14.

Second division—C. F. Ellis, Chicago, beat J. H. O'Brien, Chicago, 32—6. O'Brien beat G. F. Lyon, Chicago, 32—11. James Wood, Chicago, beat Lyon, 27—14 [two hours].

Third division—A. E. Larson, Chicago, beat A. P. Goodhue, Chicago, 21—15 [two hours].

ROQUE CHAMP MEETS TARTAR

F. C. Turner of Pasadena, who traveled 3,000 miles to win the championship diamond medal of the American Roque league tourney at Wahsington park without a defeat, caught a tartar when he wandered over to the Lincoln park courts yesterday.

Turner engaged C. C. King, veteran Chicago player, in a three game test, and after taking the first game, dropped the next two. The match consumed three hours and ten minutes.

One Legged Swimmer First in "Y" Ten Mile Contest

W. H. Kamerman, a one legged swimmer, finished first in the ten mile go as you please event at the Central Y. M. C. A. pool yesterday. J. C. White was second and W. D. Ferrill, chairman of the Central "Y" aquatic committee, third. Fifteen started the event July 10. C. H. Hanning has completed 600 of 800 laps and A. Henderson 540.

JACKIE AS ROQUE PLAYER

Versatile Athlete Star at Pastime Which Devotees Deny Is "Just Like Croquet."

Clarence G. Carlson

Great Lakes Naval Training Station, which numbers so many experts in athletics among its ranks of jackies, produced a star in another game last week when Machinist's Mate C. G. Carlson obtained leave from Athletic Officer J. B. Kaufman to compete in the seventh annual tournament of the American Roque league, which ended yesterday at Washington park. Carlson made a fine contest for the honors in the first division of play, but lost before the superior experience of the divisional champion.

Carlson, who is a Chicago boy and formerly attended Crane Tech, shot on the tech school rifle teams and won trophies for his marksmanship. He won a gold button in one of THE TRIBUNE'S skating championship preliminaries two years ago.

The present jackie began playing roque three years ago in the third or beginners' division in the championship league tourney of 1916, but made so much headway that he was ranked in the first division in 1917. He is 22 years old, and enlisted in the navy about two months ago.

Loyola Preps Lose Coach to Naval School at Pier

Edward S. Trowell, coach for the last three years at Loyola academy, has enlisted in the ensigns' school at the municipal pier. During his tenure as coach and physical director the north side academy placed its name in the hall of fame of prep athletics.

CUEISTS' GIFT: AMBULANCES ON WAY TO FRANCE

Five ambulances contributed by the billiard players of Illinois are on their way to France. Writing from Pontiac, Mich., First Lieut. Staebler of the sanitary corps of the national army yesterday notified Manager Charles Carnie that the ambulances had been consigned to the medical officer in charge of the point of embarkation, from where they will go overseas.

Writing in the absence of Maj. A. E. Browne, Lieut. Staebler said:

"Allow the writer to declare on behalf of the medical department of the army a keen appreciation of the deep sense of patriotism as expressed by this splendid donation. It will be a matter of only a week or two when these ambulances will be engaged in active service on the western front, assisting in clearing the field of the wounded, thus backing up the morale of our fighters."

Illinois Cueists Buy Ambulances.

The ambulances which were shipped to an eastern port on July 24 were paid for by the campaign of the Illinois Billiard Players' Ambulance fund. Illinois made the best showing of any of the states. Dr. Harley Parker was chairman and George B. Dryden treasurer. Another ambulance fund drive is planned for next winter.

The newly formed Western Amateur Billiard Players' association will elect its board of directors at a meeting to be held Friday afternoon at the Illinois Athletic club at 2 o'clock.

Cannefax After Title.

Robert L. Cannefax, the former St. Louis player, who is associated with Louis A. Bensinger, as billiard manager of his Madison street room, has challenged for the world's three cushion title. Last week he ran 23 points in four innings, Mr. Bensinger arriving just as he finished.

"I think I'll challenge for the three cushion title after that," Bob remarked.

"You're on," Mr. Bensinger responded, who stepped to the phone and lodged a challenge with the donors of the emblem.

Charley Otis, who has to meet Augie Kieckhefer in the fall; Alfredo De Oro, and Charley McCourt are ahead of Cannefax.

You have read of course, that the "life" of the best aviation motor is 150 flying hours.

And you must know that an aviation motor represents the highest development of gasoline engine building.

Must be—to withstand such strains for so long—for when you consider all the conditions, that 150 flying hours constitutes a terrific feat of endurance.

Figured in miles at the rate of speed our own Liberty motor has shown—144 miles per hour—it is 21,600 miles.

And in order to sustain its load in the air that motor is working to capacity all the time.

Now consider the performance of that Maxwell motor which, in 44 consecutive days and nights running never stopped, and covered, with its passengers, 22,022 miles!

It is a strange fact but true—as any metallurgist will demonstrate for you—that a motor, like a man or an horse, will do better with a rest from time to time.

For motors and the metals of which they are made, are also subject to "fatigue."

So the crucial part of that test was in its constant running—not a moment's relief allowed from the heat to cylinders or the motion of reciprocating parts.

Our records show many cases where, according to owners' statements, motor cars have gone 100,000 miles—150,000 and even 200,000 miles.

But we don't consider those cases exceptional.

Any Maxwell motor car will live to do that if kept oiled and given reasonable care.

And we are frank to concede that some other makes of cars can show similar mileages—for, as indicated above, intermittent service with rests between, is what the car is intended to do.

That is normal service.

But to withstand the terrific fatigue involved in that 44 consecutive days and nights "non-stop" test; and to cover, with four passengers, 22,022 miles; and, doing that, to average 25 miles per gallon of gasoline too—that car must be a Maxwell.

HOT WEATHER STARTS BUYING BY CORN TRADERS

Prices Climb to Highest of Week with Light Offerings.

BY CHARLES D. MICHAELS.

Weather conditions were a factor in making a strong advance in the corn market, and the crop reports helped. Close was at gains of 2¼@2⅜c. Oats gained ½@1c in Chicago. Southwestern corn markets closed 1⅛@2⅞c higher, with Kansas City leading, and oats were ⅛@⅞c better. Oats in Minneapolis gained ¼@⅝c and in Winnipeg ⅝@⅞c.

Provisions were offered sparingly and closed at the highest, with pork up 45c, lard 10@17½c, and short ribs 20c higher for the day.

Grain prices moved irregularly during the week and closed well toward the highest, with corn up 4¼@4½c and oats ⅝@2⅞c, the latter on July. Pork was unchanged. Lard gained 25@37½c and short ribs 15@20c for the week.

Crop Scare in Corn.

A crop scare is on in corn, and with hot and dry weather in the southwest, and the weekly forecast for temperatures above normal in practically all sections, combined with Clement-Curtis' report suggesting a reduction of 140,000,000 bu in the prospect for the country during the last month, it was easy to advance prices. July and September jumped to the best figures of the week, while August was only ⅛c under. The finish on the active futures was well toward the top, with August $1.55⅛ and September $1.56⅜. July finished at $1.54¼.

Trade broadened materially, with strong commission houses on the buying side, but the business was mainly in small lots. Short covering was on in volume, and local sentiment became more bullish as values advanced. Sellers of offers were forced to protect themselves. There was some selling against offers at the last, which made the closing reaction.

Expectations are for smaller receipts, private estimates as to Monday's arrivals being for only 300 cars, or about half of what they were a week ago. Eastern cash demand was active, with shipping sales 30,000 bu. Sample values strong to 5c higher. The call was mainly for low grades and mahogany. Receipts were small at 107 cars. For the week they were 2,506,000 bu, against 892,000 bu last year. Shipments were 889 bu, against 360,000 bu last year.

Commission Houses Sell Oats.

Oats were fairly active and higher, the strength in corn being the dominating influence, but commission houses were free sellers on the advance, especially at 70c for September, which checked the bulge. The close, however, was firm, with July at 76¼c, August at 70¾c, and September at 69⅝, the spread between August and September widening ⅛c.

Country offerings were not large, and there were bids for the cash grain of 80c, delivered at Georgian bay ports. Sample values were about unchanged, with a poor demand for grain on trans-Mississippi billing. Quality of the latter grain not as good as that from Illinois. Arrivals were 146 cars, with indications of considerable increase in the movement next week. Receipts for the week were 2,872,000 bu, against 1,644,000 bu last year. Shipments were 1,761,000 bu, against 1,338,000 bu last year.

Red Wheat in Demand.

Cash wheat prices were slightly easier, except on No. 2 red, the bulk of which sold at better than the government basis. Receipts were liberal at 440 cars, with around 1,000 cars expected Monday. For the week arrivals were 3,125,000 bu and shipments 621,000 bu. Last year receipts were 154,000 bu and shipments 169,000 bu. Clement, Curtis & Co.'s report suggested a crop of 875,000,000 bu for the country, or 16,000,000 bu less than the government July 1 returns, and compared with 651,000,000 bu harvested last year.

Barley Market Easy.

Rye was in moderate supply and demand, with sales of No. 2 at $1.65 and No. 3 at $1.61. Prices showed little change. Receipts, 11 cars. Milwaukee and Minneapolis were firm. The northwest had 4 cars.

Barley offerings were small, but exceeded the demand, and the market had an easy undertone. Milling and feed quoted at $1.00@1.18. Receipts, 5 cars. Milwaukee was 3@4c lower. The northwest had 22 cars.

Flax seed at Duluth closed 10@13c higher; July, $4.73; October, $4.70. Winnipeg, 8@8½c higher; July, $4.57; October, $4.52½. The three leading markets had 11 cars.

Timothy seed strong; September, $9.65 bid, and October, $9.75 asked. Toledo, unchanged to 2½c higher; September, $4.92½; October, $4.55; December, $4.60; March, $4.75 per bu of 45 lbs. Clover seed, no market; Toledo, 65@70c higher; October, $16.00; December, $15.95, per bu of 60 lbs.

Gains in Provisions.

Higher prices for corn and hogs, with light offerings of cured product, combined with fair buying by shorts and a few packers, made a stronger market, with the close at the top showing fair net gains. The use of more animal fats by the bakers, as allowed by the food administration, is construed as indicating a larger consumption of lard. Nothing new developed as to the allotments except that they are about the same as last month, with prices the same to ½c higher on meats, and had a good effect.

Shipments of lard and meats for the week largely exceeded recent weeks and last year's. Packing in Chicago for the summer season to date aggregates 2,934,000 hogs, against 2,474,000 last year. Hog supplies exceeded last year's. Prices follow:

GRANITE COTTON MILLS.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

THE corn market has become largely a weather affair and is extremely sensitive to buying or selling. Shorts were not disposed to take any chances over the Sunday holiday, and limited offerings made it easy to advance prices to the highest of the week. There was a general evening up at the last. Sentiment was more mixed at the finish. Traders who believe that corn is too far along to be hurt by high temperatures and argue that scattered showers and heavy rains have benefited the crop during the week are disposed to sell futures on bulges, while a number of those who believe that the crop has been damaged in the southwest sufficiently to lower general crop conditions for the country are buying on all breaks. This makes an active trading market with wide swings.

It is said that shorts in July oats may deliver carlots on track in the three remaining days of this month. The price yesterday moved up 1¼c from the previous day's close to 76½c. New No. 3 white oats sold at 76½@77c and standards at 76½@77¼c. In some instances the new oats brought almost the same as the old.

One of the oldest corn traders is very friendly to the buying side on general principles. He believes that corn is worth present prices. It is said that distillers have picked up the bulk of the low grade corn here, particularly the mahogany, are now figuring on some good sized lots held at Buffalo.

Clement Curtis crop report, compiled by P. S. Goodman, makes the yield of wheat around 875,000,000 bu, compared with 891,000,000 bu by the recent government figures. Some increase in winter wheat yield are offset by losses in spring wheat in North Dakota and Montana. Corn has lost ground in the southern and southwestern states. Texas will not raise its home supply. Conditions on the whole will show a sharp loss, with prospects reduced 140,000,000 bu from the July government report. Oats in the dry region of the northwest and Nebraska are very poor, and general condition is lower than a month ago. Some increase in the winter wheat yield is offset by further losses in spring in North Dakota and Montana.

Wheat receipts at primary markets since July 1 aggregate 28,828,000 bu, compared with 9,078,000 bu last year. The difference in the size of the crop and favorable weather for threshing and marketing are the main factors. Kansas City and St. Louis have received 17,854,000 bu and Chicago 4,007,000 bu.

A Wichita, Kansas, miller says he is afraid to offer any wheat until the arrival of samples, as rains the last ten days have made it impossible to get any particular quality of wheat from any of their stations. One car will come in dry and in excellent condition, and the next will be sufficiently moistened to place it in No. 3axx or No. 4 grade. The weather recently has been the finest for corn that was ever seen in Kansas at this season of the year, and if continued Kansas should have one of the biggest corn crops it has ever raised. There has been cool, rainy weather for three weeks with no hot winds, and he doubts whether at this late date there will be any hot winds to materially affect the yield.

Unless the rules regarding substitutes are changed by the food administration some of the eastern millers look for a rather slow demand for soft wheat flours throughout the crop year. They believe that the bulk of it will ultimately go for export, as the trade wants a strong product, like hard winters and springs, in order to use the substitutes to best advantage.

Receipts of grain at Chicago for Monday as estimated by James Noble of the state inspection department are for around 1,000 cars wheat, 300 cars corn, and 400 cars oats. These figures are based on returns from the railroads as to the probable amount of grain that will arriver over Sunday. Eight of the leading roads have ordered out inspection crews for Sunday work. Moisture testing starts at 6 a. m. Monday.

Oat receipts since Aug. 1, 1917, or practicaly1 the crop year, at primary markets aggregated 336,532,000 bu, compared with 302,318,000 bu the previous year. Chicago received 132,333,000 bu, compared with 144,795,000 bu last year. Minneapolis had 41,000,000 bu, an increase of over 3,000,000 bu last year. St. Louis 36,723,000 bu, an increase of over 12,000,000 bu. Omaha 26,804,000 bu, compared with 18,153,000 bu last year. Indianapolis made a good showing with 19,827,000 bu, or almost 15,000,000 bu increase, and Milwaukee had 30,013,000 bu, compared with 32,997,000 bu last year.

Primary receipts of corn since Nov. 1, 1917, aggregate 232,885,000 bu, compared with 195,822,000 bu last year. Chicago had 73,106,000 bu, against 68,634,000 bu last year. Omaha 38,044,000 bu, being second on the list, compared with 22,812,000 bu last year.

Sample grade corn ranged Saturday at $1.00 to $1.40 in Chicago, compared with 95c to $1.20 a week ago.

"Higher hogs had little effect on future product," says W. L. Gregson, "but late in the week with a weaker hog market food administration authorization of advances of lard, hams, bacon, and picnics of 1c per pound and dry salted meats of ⅜c in some cases and 1c per pound in others toned up the general list and offerings became light. Estimates are still liberal for the fall hog receipts and the general domestic and foreign trade is on a liberal, healthy basis."

John Inglis, the crop expert, says hot weather in Kansas is just what the crop needs and will be more beneficial than harmful. He says that the trade forgets that even the hottest weather only injures the border of a corn field, as it does not penetrate unless accompanied by hot winds.

Shipments of grain from Chicago the last week, via lake, aggregated 584,000 bu wheat to Buffalo, 135,000 bu corn to the same port, and 1,037,000 bu to Canada, a total of 1,756,000 bu for the three grains. The oats will be dropped from the visible supply in Monday's statement.

CASH GRAIN NEWS

CASH wheat at Chicago was unchanged to ½c lower. Bids from the seaboard were on the basis of $2.34½, track New York, and made fair purchases. Kansas City was unchanged to 1c lower, with the decline on ordinary samples. Bennett's office reported a good demand there for soft wheat. The three leading markets had 998 cars, against 794 cars a week ago and 326 cars last year.

Low grade and mahogany corn at Chicago was in active demand from distillers, with some sales at 5c advance. Good brought former prices. St. Louis was unchanged to 5c higher, Kansas City unchanged to 2c higher, Omaha unchanged to 4c higher, and Peoria and Milwaukee were firm. The leading market had 420 cars, against 402 cars a week ago and 326 cars last year.

Demand for cash oats was fair, with prices here unchanged, while St. Louis was unchanged to 1c higher, Kansas City unchanged to ½c lower, Omaha 1c lower, Peoria unchanged to ¼c higher, and Milwaukee ¼@½c higher. Domestic shipping sales, 90,000 bu. Leading markets had 366 cars, against 328 cars a week ago and 259 cars last year. Cash grain prices in leading markets follow:

BEST STEERS GAIN 10C TO 25C DURING THE WEEK

Prime Hogs Sell 5@10 Cents Higher; Top Reaches $18.95.

The last week's average price of hogs at $18.55 stood 55c higher than the previous week and highest since the first week of last October, when it figured the highest on record at $18.90. Receipts for Monday are estimated at 18,000 cattle, 33,000 hogs, and 15,000 sheep, against 7,141 cattle, 15,481 hogs, and 4,560 sheep corresponding Monday a year ago, when a threatened switchmen's strike curtailed arrivals. Next week's estimated receipts, 62,000 cattle, 130,000 hogs, and 65,000 sheep.

Average price of hogs at Chicago was $18.30, being same as Friday and a week ago, against $16.65 a year ago. Last week's estimated average weight was 247 lbs, the heaviest in three years, against 244 lbs previous week and 231 lbs a year ago.

PRODUCE TRADE

WATERMELONS were in active demand and prices higher at $500 to $750 per car, depending upon the size. The market has cleaned up fairly the last few days and fresh receipts yesterday were only 13 cars. Offerings of cantaloupe melons were ample, but only the best are selling. Lighter arrivals of peaches met a fair demand at full prices. Other fruits were taken moderately.

Supplies of apples are ample and prices are receding. Tomatoes moved off fairly, with ample supplies, a firmer market prevailing in potatoes with 22 cars in from distant points and 2 cars of home grown. There were 195 cars, all told, on track. Prices generally showed little change. Live fowls declined ½c to 28c. Roosters were ½c lower at 21½c. Spring chickens and broilers sold at 32c. Eggs were in good demand, with northern firsts 38½@38¾c.

A fair call existed for butter, with whole milk creamery held at full prices, but an easier feeling existed on standards.

INSURANCE NEWS IN ALL BRANCHES EAST AND WEST

Underwriters Announce Plan for Handling Grain.

BY THOMAS R. WEDDELL.

The Underwriters' Grain association, which is to handle the fire insurance on the buildings and contents of terminal elevators on the coöperative plan, will begin business this week. All insurance in force on the terminal elevators covered will be assumed by the association on receipt from each company, not later than Aug. 1, of a schedule showing its outstanding liability. The entire liability is to be transferred to the association, the companies not being allowed to dispose of the wooden elevators and retain the fireproof risks. Thereafter additional liability will be taken by the association, according to the plan already announced.

E. B. Hatch, secretary of the Western Union, and Fred A. Rye, manager of the Western Insurance bureau, have been designated by the conference committee as joint treasurers, and all disbursements for the association will be directed by them. The binding agent in each state will have no authority to collect premiums and no money transactions will be handled by him.

A strong feature will be made of the inspection of the risks, and the original inspection report of each elevator will be sent to the companies soon. A reinspection report will be sent weekly on the more hazardous houses, and fortnightly or monthly on the fireproof houses, as may seem necessary. The expense of this inspection will be absorbed by the state rating bureaus. All inspections in Illinois will be made by the employés of the National Inspection Company of Chicago.

FIRE MARSHAL'S PROGRAM.

John G. Gamber, state fire marshal of Illinois and secretary of the Fire Marshals' association of North America, has issued a preliminary program for its thirteenth annual convention, to be held Sept. 3 to 6 at Sioux Falls, S. D. This is the first time the association has met in the northwest, and in view of its location in the center of the grain belt special attention is paid to the inspection of mills, elevators and food warehouses. Papers will be presented by federal and state officials and leading underwriters, dealing with various features of the fire prevention campaign.

REMARKABLE FIRE RECORD.

W. J. Pollard, fire chief of the International Harvester companies, has announced a remarkable fire record, showing the excellence of the fire prevention and fire protection service in the various plants. During the last five years the fire loss in the eighteen International Harvester factories in the United States and Canada was $1,028.87. Incipient fires, with a loss as low as $2, were included in the record.

INSURANCE NOTES.

The annual report of the Tennessee insurance department shows fire premiums for 1917 of $5,993,567, with a loss ratio of 52.5. The life premiums paid in 1917 were $11,526,738, with casualty premium of $4,156,103.

The Standard Steel Car company, which for years has carried its own insurance, is now placing $34,000,000 of fire insurance in the stock companies on its various plants.

R. W. Stevens, vice president of the Illinois Life, has gone to Minocqua, Wis., for a rest and to recuperate from the recent operation on his tonsils.

The Oklahoma National Life of Oklahoma City has been sold to the Great Southern Life of Texas, with outstanding insurance of $1,500,000.

T. Louis Hansen, superintendent of agencies for the Guardian Life of America, has been appointed vice president and agency manager.

The Michigan Conservation association will meet tomorrow at Detroit to arrange for the reinspection of the work gone over last year.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters has issued a pamphlet suggesting further regulations for the storage of explosives.

The agency convention of the Franklin Life of Illinois will be held Aug. 20-22 at Signal Mountain, near Chattanooga, Tenn.

COTTON TRADE NEWS

NEW YORK, July 27.—The cotton market today was relatively steady, with the close unchanged to 10 points higher. The market improved soon after the opening, on covering and a little new buying based on the dry weather forecast for Texas, supplemented by a number of unfavorable reports from that state.

It was said that the plant is deteriorating rapidly and that damage in the south, central, and western portions is beyond repair. In contrast to yesterday's forecast for showers in the state the details today showed no precipitation, except a little along the coast, and this fact tended to increase the bullish sentiment toward the close.

Private crop reports are beginning to appear in advance of the government, one of which made condition 75 and another 78.8, representing from 6 to about 10 points' decline under the previous month.

Fall River sales of print cloths for the week were 90,000 pieces, and curtailment 150,000 pieces, latter due to further draft calls this week. Futures:

March	23.30	.....	.....	23.40	23.33

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Small advances were made by cotton today. The market felt a demand from shorts, who wanted to cover over the week end, and also a moderate fresh demand for long account, based on bullish private bureau condition reports. The close showed net gains of 7 to 10 points. Closing bids: October, 23.75c; December, 23.45c; January, 23.43c; March, 23.40c; May, 23.40c.

TALK OF THE STREET

NEWS from Washington continued to be favorable from the market viewpoint. Prospective taxes on excess profits are not to be so large as had been expected. The increase in revenue is to come from tax on incomes. While this in a way does not help the ability of the individual to buy securities, it is a great stimulant for business sentiment to understand that one of the sources of the individual's ability to pay taxes, corporate returns, will not be unduly cut down.

There was little public interest in the market and prices, while firm, did not result in a large volume of trading. News usually effective had no further influence than to hold quotations at a firm level. Absence of aggressive movements on the part of operators and a like absence of public buying left the market in a listless condition.

As the stockholders of the American Telephone and Western Union Telegraph companies give consideration to control of the properties by the government, they draw unfavorable conclusions, resulting in offerings of the securities for sale. American Telephone and Telegraph declined from 94½ to 93⅞ and closed at the low point. Western Union declined one point to 81, the low price. When, a few weeks ago, American Telephone sold below 100 it was the beginning of a series of market levels lower than the stock had experienced in years.

There was no particular interest in the railroad issues except Canadian Pacific, which was active and unusually firm, advancing about 2 points. American railroad stocks were dull. Prices ruled a trifle lower.

The copper shares were without special interest and the tobacco stocks were inclined to sell off. The motor issues were irregular. General Motors fell away 4⅛ points. There was nothing doing in Studebaker and only a few trades in Willys-Overland.

The decline in General Motors was accounted for by the announcement from Washington that the capital issues committee had approved the General Motors plan to issue $28,000,000 new stock for the purpose of absorbing the Chevrolet company.

LIBERTY LOAN SUBTERFUGE TO BE ABANDONED

Salesmen to Point Out the Desirability of Registering.

BY GLENN GRISWOLD.

When the next Liberty loan campaign opens salesmen, flying squadmen, and four minute men will be instructed that the system of subterfuge adopted in previous campaigns to avoid the trouble of registering bonds will be abandoned and a frank explanation will be made that investors should either provide safe deposit protection to their securities or have them registered.

In the past salesmen and campaign managers have carefully avoided an explanation of the protection which registration affords and have sold and delivered coupon bonds whenever possible. As a result the number of registered bonds is almost negligible, while 90 per cent of the pieces bought have been taken by small investors who have no safe deposit facilities and can ill afford to carry the risk of losing coupon bonds.

Balk at New York Idea.

Bankers dislike registered bonds because it is necessary for a high priced assistant cashier to use a rubber stamp and verify signatures when bonds are transferred. At one time there were indications that having induced small investors to accept bearer bonds the banks would follow the lead of New York institutions and give free storage to small denomination pieces, but the movement was squelched.

The Northern Trust company took an advanced stand and publicly advertised that it will give safe deposit storage to all Liberty bonds in small denominations or amounts. Instead of being swamped with a profitless business the bank has made a valuable addition to its clientele and is spending money to advertise for more business of the same sort.

The committee in charge of the campaign recognize that the investor is entitled to the protection either of safe storage or of registration, or in any event that he has a right to expect that the two forms of protection be fully explained to him and to make his own choice of the degree of risk he wishes to assume.

Coupon Bonds Disappear.

The list of lost and stolen bonds—almost interminable—issued by the treasury department is largely composed of coupon bonds of small denomination, bonds that have been kept in the buyer's pocket or in the bookcase in the parlor. The flood of selling that has depressed Liberty loan values has been in the major part due to the liquidation of small denomination bonds.

Bankers say they have not encouraged registration of bonds because of the delay caused by the verification of signatures when the bond is sold.

LOAN TOTAL AT RESERVE BANK BREAKS RECORD

Members Make a Large Gain in Discounts During Week.

Member banks in the Chicago federal reserve bank district made a large increase in the discounts at the reserve bank in the last week. The expansion was $46,979,967, and the total volume of loans was brought up to $[illegible],867, the highest on record.

Much of this increased borrowing has been by the large Chicago banks. The largest local institution is understood to have discounts around $41,[illegible]. While this is about half what the bank may borrow, should the necessity for taking care of its customers demand it, there is a distinct disinclination to further expand at this time, and borrowers are being asked to restrict their demands to reasonable necessities.

The note circulation of the reserve bank made a moderate increase, $2,986,245. This item has now reached a total—the highest recorded—of $271,776,545.

U. S. Deposits Increase.

The weekly statement also shows an increase of $8,461,802 in United States government deposits, being money paid in by the member banks. Comparative figures follow:

Gotham Loans Expand.

The New York bank statement showed a large expansion in loans, $118,366,000, with only a small gain, less than $2,000,000, in demand deposits. Cash decreased $1,920,000, so that the net result of operations was a decrease of $2,022,910 in excess reserve, leaving that item at $72,383,710.

Some reason for the slightly easier condition in the call money market may be found in an increase of $141,[illegible],000 in government deposits. The total is now $424,563,000. The increase recorded came from other federal reserve bank districts. Chicago contributed a large part. The figures follow:

WALL STREET TRADING NEAR THE MINIMUM

Fluctuations Far Out of Proportion to Volume.

New York, July 27.—[Special.]—The height of the vacation season, bringing extreme of hot weather, has undoubtedly been largely responsible for the falling away of stock exchange business, and today's session saw transactions near the minimum. After a firm opening prices turned irregular, and subsequent transactions produced fluctuations far out of proportion to the volume of business.

A few issues, among them American Tobacco, Canadian Pacific, Distillers, Pressed Steel Car preferred, United States Realty, Virginia-Carolina Chemical, and Wilson & Co. gained from one to three points; on the other hand, General Motors dropped 4⅛ and Western Union a full point. Steel was relatively inactive, selling up to 108¾ in the early part of the session, only to drop back nearly a point.

Attitude Differs.

There is a marked difference in the attitude which brokers are taking toward the course of the market in coming weeks, some of them seeing in recent manifestations signs of an approaching bull movement, which will write the recent allied gains into prices, while others can discover no prospect of a broad speculative demand while call money rates continue around 6 per cent and with another government financing operation to take place in two months.

The market's recovery in the last two weeks has not kept pace with the improvement in the war news, but it should not be forgotten that official communiques have never fully borne out the more optimistic reports with which the street has been enthused.

Paper Holdings Decrease.

The Federal Reserve bank reported commercial paper on hand of $124,209,000, against $214,579,000 held a week earlier, and obligations of the United States government amounting to $272,185,000, against $194,649,000 held a week ago.

FINANCIAL NOTES

No action was taken on back dividends at the monthly meeting of the International Agriculture corporation. Dividends will come up for consideration at the next meeting, in September, and action may be taken then with regard to the payment of arrears, which amount to 37½ per cent.

◆

Many of the companies, including Lackawanna Steel, Republic Steel, and Corn Products, that have issued either quarterly or semi-annual reports compiled their statements on a flat 80 per cent excess profits tax and a 7 per cent exemption. If the bill as proposed by the ways and means committee becomes a law reports already issued must undergo a sharp revision upward.

◆

The railroad administration is considering issuing an order forbidding the garnisheeing of the wages of more than 2,000,000 railway employés as a means of eliminating the legal work caused by these actions. If this is done, it was said today, special efforts will be made to compel employés to pay their bills without court action and those against whom repeated complaint is made will be discharged. This course would place railroad men in the same class, so far as garnishment is concerned, with government employés.

◆

Federal representatives have ruled that paper mill workers are not entitled to the ten per cent bonus allowed by the International Paper company.

◆

The seventh federal reserve district had produced up to noon Saturday subscriptions to $63,179,000 of the $70,000,000 treasury certificates allotted to its banks and there were still two full business days in which orders will be received. Indiana was the only state which had exceeded its quota last night, but Illinois was within less than half a million of the mark.

SAYS PUBLIC MUST ABSORB RATE INCREASE

New Attitude of State Boards Shown by California.

The new attitude of rate making authorities toward public utilities is expressed as follows by Chairman Max Thelen of the California railroad commission in handing down that body's decision in the rate increase application of the Pacific Gas and Electric company:

"The gas companies cannot absorb this extra cost and remain sound financial institutions capable of properly serving the public. Therefore this commission has no choice other than to place this additional burden upon consumers.

"Wages of employés have been increased and may be increased still further. This is to be expected, because the cost of living has increased to such a marked extent that the managements of utility companies cannot and should not refuse reasonable increases of wages to meet living conditions, as well as to meet competitive labor conditions.

Cost of Materials Up.

"The cost of practically all materials used in the manufacture and distribution of gas has increased, and there is no assurance that still further increases will not be made.

"The above considerations clearly establish this application as an emergency proceeding. The war has produced abnormal business conditions, which affect the business of producing and distributing gas, as it has affected all other business, and where the utility service is under regulation and the price at which the service is sold to the public is dictated by public authority the companies are helpless unless public authority will extend prompt relief.

"Entirely aside from the question of justice and fairness to utility properties it is seriously to be considered that unless the public utility companies are maintained in a reasonably sound financial condition they will not be able to serve the public efficiently, as it is a demonstrated fact that a weak and staggering company is incapable of producing good service."

The Republic Railway and Light company reports for June gross earnings of $449,349, compared with $375,345 for June, 1917; net after taxes, $136,268, compared with $120,959; surplus after charges, $43,646, compared with $44,747. For the twelve months ended with June gross earnings were $5,467,589, compared with $4,283,069 for the twelve months ended with June, 1917; net after taxes, $1,635,068, compared with $1,594,265; surplus after charges, $614,943, compared with $719,560.

Electric energy output was 21.1 per cent greater than for the corresponding period a year ago.

CHICAGO...STOCK TRANSACTIONS

There was moderate interest in the packing house shares on the local stock exchange. Swift & Co. was up 1 point to 110. Cudahy had an advance of ⅞, while Wilson & Co. on transactions of 55 shares advanced 2½ points. In the last two trading days these stocks have exhibited firmness without developments of importance being announced. The trading has not been in large volume.

—Does it pay to sell accounts?

Wouldn't you pay us ⅔ of 1% on your sales in order to make 8% net for yourselves as this concern did—nearly twelve times more than they paid us?

A letter to us from a Manufacturer rated $100,000 to $150,000, who sold us $1,529,339.03 of Accounts within the past 15 months.

"June 20, 1918.

"Replying to your letter of June 13th regarding the difference in the surplus account, we now give you for your information the following figures:

"December 30th, 1916, our surplus stood at $48,119.74. December 1917 the surplus accounts amounted to $94,154.45, representing a gain in the surplus accounts of $46,034.71, and the dividends of $6,000 which were paid during the year would give us A NET PROFIT OF $52,034.71.

"For your information we state that on May 31st of this year our surplus account had grown to $153,534.32, which WITH THE DIVIDENDS WE HAVE PAID WOULD MAKE OUR PROFITS $69,369.87 for the past FIVE MONTHS."

It cost the above concern only $10,356.92 to sell us $1,529,339.03 of Accounts (about ⅔ of 1%) since they began dealing with us, 15 months ago. They therefore paid us $10,356.92 in order to make net for themselves $121,404.58—nearly twelve times as much.

We serve others profitably—why not you?

ILLINOIS RATED FIRST AS WAR FOOD PRODUCER

That Illinois, as a food producing state, is meeting its war obligations splendidly, is shown in a report of the food production and conservation committee to the State Council of Defense.

"Illinois and Iowa are the two greatest food producing states in the union," the report says. "Together they produce about 25 per cent of the country's corn crop, and the largest proportion of its live stock.

"Illinois was requested to raise 100,000 acres of spring wheat this year. Kane county alone put out more than 20,000 acres, and the state as a whole will raise at least twice the number of acres asked for, and probably three times as many. This is typical of her resources.

Greatest Food Crop.

"There are five counties in Illinois, any one of which produces more bushels of cereal crops than the combined total cereal crop of the six New England states.

"Illinois this year is producing its greatest food crop, and with the greatest labor shortage the state has ever had the crops are being cared for.

"The state as a whole is experiencing its 'peak period' for labor. In spite of this the demand for farm help through our county organizations and the Chicago office has been lighter than at any previous time. This is a great recommendation for the efforts of the United States Boys' Working reserve in placing on Illinois farms more than 17,000 boys and for our emergency farm labor campaign, which was successful in enrolling more than 60,000 emergency workers from the small towns of the state.

Praise for Farmers.

"Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Christie at the conference of representatives of twelve middle west states reviewed particularly the work of Illionis and Kansas and considered the results as remarkable. He stated that the war department has continually received complaints from other parts of the country on the drafting of experienced farm hands, but Gen. Crowder is determined that no exemptions be granted and in a statement to the farmers of the northwest said:

"'The farmers in those sections which are confronted with the problem of harvesting wheat at a time when some of their help will be called to the colors should receive an inspiration from Kansas and Illinois. In general the farmers of that section faced the same situation, yet every acre of grain was cut and shocked by small townspeople who responded to the call.'"

GAS LITIGATION PAY ROLLS ARE ORDERED PAID

Mayor Releases Cash, but Test Suit Will Be Filed.

Mayor Thompson and Corporation Counsel Ettelson surrendered to the demand that they authorize payment of earned salaries to special counsel, experts, and accountants in the city's gas litigation controversy. A tieup of the pay rolls threatened to block the city's fight.

Ald. H. D. Capitain, chairman of the city council committee on gas litigation, was informed by Mr. Ettelson yesterday that the mayor had turned the entire matter over to the law department. Mr. Ettelson promised the alderman that the outstanding bills will be paid and that there would not be any effort on the part of the administration to hold up any future bills.

It was agreed to hold up one of the bills of Donald R. Richberg, the city's special counsel in gas matters. Mr. Richberg is to sue the city to recover the amount of this bill. The case, no matter what the ruling of the lower courts is, will be appealed to the Supreme court, so that a ruling can be had on the city's right to employ counsel other than the corporation counsel.

The accounts held up amount to about $40,000. All these will be approved and paid except an item of $1,000 for Mr. Richberg, on which the contemplated suit is to be brought.

The entire accounting force employed in the gas work for the city was to have quit at noon yesterday. This would have hampered seriously the city's fight in the courts and the state public utilities commission against the gas company.

118 U. S. PLANTS POUR OUT SHIPS TO BEAT KAISER

There are now 118 fully equipped yards in the United States and forty-four others partly complete, of which twenty-three are more than 75 per cent finished and only six are less than 25 per cent ready to begin building tonnage.

Thirty-seven steel yards which the United States had when war began have grown to seventy-two. The old yards have been increased from 162 ways to 195 and more are being added. Eighty yards for building wooden ships now are in operation or nearing completion. The remainder are for building concrete ships, a new industry developed by the war need.

The 118 yards which are complete are distributed sectionally as follows: Pacific coast, 48; Atlantic coast, 38; great lakes, 16, and gulf coast, 16.

DISCRIMINATING CRACKSMEN.

Burglars entered the residence of Edward M. Bowen, 326 West Sixty-third street, yesterday and stole seven silk shirts and $56.

GERMAN MONEY USED BY U. S. TO BEAT U-BOATS

$5,000,000 Shipyard in Florida Will Be Built with Kaiser's Cash.

A shipyard that will cost $5,000,000 is to be built at St. Andrews bay, Florida, by a Chicago firm, with German money, and the yard will be on land that has been taken away from Germans.

Contracts to build the yard and to proceed at once with the construction of eight barges have been let to the Bates & Rogers Construction company, 875 Old Colony building. The contracts were let by the Emrgency Fleet corporation. The money will be furnished by A. Mitchell Palmer, alien property custodian. Mr. Palmer has also furnished the site. It is expected that the first ship will be launched in five months. After that there is to be one launching a month.

Officials Are Interned.

St. Andrews bay is sixty miles east of Pensacola. For twenty-three years the German American Lumber company has been operating a lumber plant at this point, but recently its activities were checked and the officials of the company were interned.

The Germans had acquired 150,000 acres of pine land, evidently as the result of a carefully planned campaign. It has been discovered that the principal owner of the company was Prince Fuerstlich Schaumber von Hoofkomer, of Bremen. The headquarters of the company was in Bremen, but there was a nominal president in the United States. A new man was given the position every three years. This official was invariably brought from South America, and had his office at Pensacola. The business done by the lumber company was small.

Big Expense Account.

During Mr. Palmer's investigation into the affairs of the company, he found that the president, apparently, paid little attention to the supposed business of the firm, but that he had a big expense account. One president ran up an expense that was close to $100,000. The Germans made every effort to keep all development away from St. Andrews bay, and they succeeded so well that this locality has hardly been heard of by Americans, although it is declared to be one of the best harbors in the country, and a strategic point of great value as a naval base.

Bates & Rogers have also just been awarded a contract to build a $10,000,000 air nitrate plant at Toledo, O.

"L" LINE LAWYER THINKS TRACTION AGREEMENT NEAR

Predicts Settlement of Terms Will Be Made Tomorrow.

Gilbert E. Porter, general counsel for the elevated railroad interests, declared yesterday that he believed a settlement of the traction dispute would be reached before tomorrow afternoon's meeting of the city council committee on local transportation.

Before the committee meets to take up an ordinance providing for subways and the unification of the surface and elevated lines Mr. Porter will have a conference with surface lines representatives, Walter L. Fisher, the city's special counsel in traction affairs, and Ald. H. D. Capitain, chairman of the committee.

Differences Near Settlement.

Mr. Porter predicted that the points on which the elevated lines have failed to agree with the other conferees would be ironed out at this session, so that a completed ordinance can be presented to the committee in the afternoon.

"We really are not far apart," Mr. Porter said. "We asked to have some things added to our valuation which seem to have been overlooked by the Chicago traction and subway commission when it made its $70,000,000 valuation of our properties.

"On the rate of return we are not far apart. I see no reason for not assuming that we can reach an agreement before the committee meets."

"L" Lines Not Agreed.

The surface lines' men and the city's representatives have reached an agreement by which the elevated and surface car companies would receive substantially 6 per cent on their agreed valuation. This has not been accepted by the elevated companies.

If the conference before the committee meets fails to result in an agreement with all parties, Ald. Capitain said he would state the terms offered the elevated roads and tell the committee that it was impossible to reach an agreement.

In this event the traction program will be dropped for the time being, as Ald. Capitain said there was no use wasting time considering an ordinance to which the elevated lines would not agree.

Aid for Traction Lines Hauling War Workers?

Government loans may be made to local transportation lines that carry workmen from Chicago to steel manufacturing plants in Indiana. A plan is being discussed, according to a dispatch from Washington last night, that will enable the companies to buy more equipment and make other improvements. It is contended this method will be cheaper and more effective than providing housing facilities in the mill towns, as was planned earlier.

REPLACING WAR LOSSES

Traveling Salesmen in Big Demand.

The Selective Draft has created thousands of additional openings for Salesmen and Saleswomen at salaries ranging up to $10,000 a year, and the demand for Traveling and City Salesmen now exceeds, and will undoubtedly continue to exceed, the supply.

Why work for small pay when you can earn big pay selling goods? Don't think that you cannot get into the big money class until you have investigated—until you learn how easily and quickly you can enter this productive, essential line of work. The National Salesmen's Training Association, Suite 439-E Monadnock Bldg., Chicago, Ill., has successfully trained thousands of men and women through their spare time, home-study Course, and their Free Employment Department has helped thousands to success.

Decide to let them do the same for you and write or call at their offices for full information regarding their Training and Free Employment Service. They will teach you how to become an expert Salesman and assist you through their Service Department in securing a position while you are studying.

Order Your Enclosed Cadillac Now —or Join the Waiting List

Fine enclosed bodies of the Cadillac standard are now more difficult to produce than the Cadillac chassis. And the difficulty is increasing in the face of increasing demand.

From now to November first our entire promised allotment of enclosed Cadillacs of all types is about enough for an average month's business. While our June and July business have been the largest in our history.

Right now we have a few Limousines, Landaulets, Town Cars, Town Landaulets and Imperial Limousines secured in advance and on which we can make delivery when desired. Some Victorias, Broughams and Suburbans will be received next month.

After this announcement they will soon be sold. Then it means waiting for an enclosed Cadillac, with delivery date uncertain.

If you order now you can be sure of securing the type of car you want when you want it—you will receive a higher allowance for your old car than is probable later—you will avoid the disappointment of driving an old car while repairs are increasingly expensive and difficult—you will be assured of adequate transportation on an economical basis for years to come.

Thus every condition suggests immediate action. Order your enclosed Cadillac now—or join the waiting list.

What causes Hangnails

YOU NEED NEVER AGAIN HAVE THEM

If the cuticle is allowed to grow up onto the surface of the nail, the skin will tear, become detached and form hangnails. Hangnails also come from improper or too vigorous treatment of the cuticle.

To prevent hangnails, your whole effort should be to keep the cuticle unbroken.

This is exactly what Cutex does—it removes the cuticle without injury—it leaves the skin at the base of the nail smooth and firm—unbroken.

The right way to manicure

In the Cutex package you will find absorbent cotton and an orange stick. Wrap some of the cotton around the end of the stick and dip it into the Cutex bottle. Work the stick around the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle. Almost at once you will be able to wipe away the dead surplus skin. Then rinse the fingers in clear water.

Remove all stains from underneath the nails by applying a little Cutex Nail White. Finish with Cutex Nail Polish.

When you see how smooth Cutex keeps your cuticle, you will never go back to the cuticle-cutting method!

Cutex quickly removes overgrown cuticle, does away with hangnails and dry, rough skin—all the nail troubles quickly disappear. Try it. See for yourself.

You can secure Cutex at any drug or department store. The cuticle remover comes in 30c, 60c and $1.25 bottles. Cutex Nail White is 30c. Cutex Nail Polish in cake, paste, powder, liquid or stick form is 30c. Cutex Cuticle Comfort for sore or tender cuticle is also 30c. If your favorite store hasn't it, order direct.

Are you still sweet and dainty hours after your bath?

Be as exquisite all day as you are the moment you step from your bath! Odorono, a physician's formula, corrects entirely the unnatural, excessive perspiration that spoils your frocks and stockings—that is so embarrassing.

Use Odorono tonight—wherever perspiration troubles you—under your arms, on your hands, feet or forehead. One application will keep your skin dry and absolutely odorless for three days. Daily baths affect it not at all.

At all toilet counters, 50c and $1.00. Trial size, 30c. The Odorono Co., 1105 Blair Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio. Write for our booklet, "The Appealing Charm of Daintiness," and suggest to the men in your family that they write for "The Assurance of Perfect Grooming."

Dr. Allyn endorses Odorono

"We do not believe that any harm can come from stopping the excretion of perspiration in limited areas, such as under the arms, feet, forehead, etc.

"Experimental and practical tests show that Odorono is harmless, economical and effective for the purpose when employed as directed, and will injure neither the skin nor the health."

La=may Face Powder Does Not Contain Any White Lead

Now you can use a pure face powder that beautifies your complexion wonderfully and is guaranteed not to injure the most delicate baby skin. And it really stays on better than any other face powder. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder (Poudre de Riz) to make it stick. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder pimples. Five thousand dollars is offered any chemist who analyzes it and finds it contains any white lead or rice powder. The specialist who makes this improved powder uses a medicinal ingredient that doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and pimples. It is also astringent, discouraging flabbiness, crows' feet and wrinkles. Because it is pure and because it stays on so well this La-may powder (French, Poudre L'Ame) is now used by over a million American women. The large size is only fifty cents and the trial size twenty-five cents. Remember, La-may is guaranteed. If you do not find La-may much better than any you have ever used, your dealer is authorized to return your money without question. Refuse substitutes. Your common sense will tell you that when you are offered a substitute it is sure to be a demonstrator trying to sell an inferior powder that pays a big commission. When you use this absolutely pure La-may and see how splendidly it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it so quickly became the most popular beauty powder sold in New York.

Over One Million American Women Are Now Using La-may Face Powder

Ask the Soda Man for Manitou Lemonade

When your collar's wilted and you're panting with red-hot thirst ask the soda man to shake up a Manitou lemonade. Manitou is spring-pure sparkling water that quenches thirst and cools parched throats. Drink Manitou plain, from the cool, green bottle. It's good for you.

Nature Charges Manitou

The gushing, cool bubblets are Nature's own. Manitou is Coloradan deep-spring water, charged with its own natural gas. Manitou is the only nature-carbonated water you can buy. It flows pure and cold from the famous spring at the foot of Pike's Peak.

Try Manitou orangeade or a Manitou grape-juice highball. Leading druggists and grocers will deliver Manitou to your home.

This water and bottle are imitated. Do not accept a substitute. To be sure you are getting ORIGINAL Manitou—look for the eagle on the cap.

THE WAY TO THE WEDDING

by Margaret Cameron

Ned Was Forgetful and the Lady Was Elusive.

IT was the Wednesday after Easter. The year, being unimportant, need not be specified. Ned McEwen, strolling along the second level of the great bridge on his way to that port of the borough of Brooklyn known as Bay Ridge, where he was going to see Howard Forbes married, caught sight of a large bulletin announcing the train he sought, and near it an ascending stair, toward which he turned. A moment later his attention was attracted by a young woman who stood just beyond the ticket kiosk; first because hers was the fine, free, unconscious type of beauty of which he had dreamed much during his long absence from his native land, and later because she seemed, although in evening dress, to be alone and watching for some one.

As he approached and her scrutinizing glance passed from other faces to his she started, stared for an incredulous moment, and moved swiftly toward him, smiling and holding out her hand.

"Ned McEwen, of all men!" she rejoiced. "I can't be mistaken! You are Ned McEwen?"

"I never doubted it before," he warmly assured her, and there was nothing in his manner to indicate, even to a keen observer, that he had not the faintest idea who she was or where they had met, "but it's so long since anything as delightful as this has happened to me that it makes me question my own identity."

"O, yes," she nodded, laughing and withdrawing her hand from his, "you're manifestly Ned McEwen! And neither time nor tide has changed you a bit."

"Nor you," said he.

His congenital inability to remember faces was a failing concerning which McEwen was extremely sensitive, and so cleverly had he learned to conceal it, so expert had he become in tracing connections during an apparently casual conversation, that only his closest friends realized how often he was at a disadvantage.

"Of course, you're going to the wedding," she affirmed rather than questioned; and here, he congratulated himself, was his first clew. Since he had never met Florence Keeler, the bride of the evening, this ready inference as to his destination argued that he was intimately connected in his companion's mind with Howard Forbes. Straightway he began calling to mind girls whom both he and Forbes had known, and they were many, but into none of those memories could he fit this woman. Meanwhile, he responded:

"Of course I am. And you?"

"Naturally. But what I want to know is how you happen to be here?

"O, there's nothing about me that you don't already know from Howard and the rest," she carelessly returned. "When did you arrive?"

"This afternoon."

"Then you haven't seen Howard?"

"I haven't seen anybody but you. And I don't think you realize what abominable correspondents 'Howard and the rest' are."

"O—really? Haven't they told you anything about me?" A flicker of amusement came into the woman's eyes, and she looked at him so quizzically that he quaked lest he had made a false step. Her next words relieved him. "You're sure the fault wasn't with the postal service? Because I seem to remember hearing rumors, from time to time, that you must be either dead or paralyzed—or married."

"Well—guilty," he confessed; and they both laughed. "I like to get letters—and I always intend to answer them."

"Virtuous person! That's so enlightening to your friends! Still—good intentions are said to make excellent pavement. By the way, we're going to a wedding, and inasmuch as Tempus has probably not abated his usual pace, don't you think we should be fugiting ourselves?"

"By all means! But—are you alone? I thought—you seemed to be waiting for some one."

"I half promised to meet the Taylors here—you don't know them, I think—but as they're always late, I warned them that I should go on with any acquaintance who came along—and you came." She shot a roguish glance at him, to which he promptly replied:

"Then let's go quickly, lest they arrive and spoil my tête-à-tête with you."

"Do you know that this is the way?" she demurred, as he turned again toward the near-by stair. "Would it be better to ask and make sure?"

"O, no; this is all right," asserted McEwen.

"You've been over to the Keelers' before, then?"

"Never. But Howard sent me most explicit directions. This is right." He began to realize that he had entered upon a path beset with dangers unforeseen, and that if he was to be alone with this girl all the way to Bay Ridge he must either find out quickly who she was or be ignominiously detected. Therefore, as they climbed together to the upper platform, he hazarded, "From your unfamiliarity with Brooklyn trains, I take it you haven't seen a great deal of Miss Keeler."

"No—not a great deal," she admitted, and again her amused, speculative glance disquieted him. "To be sure, I called upon her"—this was apparently a casual afterthought—"but that time I drove over, with Bobbie and some other people, so I learned nothing about trains—except that it's wiser to take one."

"I begin to understand why Howard wrote me that I could drive if I wished, but that he strongly advised the train," said McEwen, laughing.

"Did he? Good for Howard! I'll tell Bobbie that. Bobbie was furious—indeed, we all but came to blows—because I simply would not have a car tonight. By the way, Bobbie's sick tonight. That's the reason I'm alone."

"O? Then I shall not see him at the wedding," he regretted, racking his brain for memory of anybody named Robert among Forbes' friends. Then, to explain what must seem to her an unpardonable oversight, "I—I hoped he might be coming over later."

"O, you remember about Bobbie, then? You waited a long time before mentioning it!"

"I've been far too busy thinking about you to waste any time on 'Bobbie,'" he avowed, truthfully enough. Was the man her brother? Her cousin? Then, for the first time, it occurred to him that she might be married. Could this "Bobbie" be her husband? A line of cars wound toward them and he added: "We're in luck. Here comes our particular serpent."

"Now," he enjoined, as they found seats and settled down for a long chat, "tell me all about yourself."

"What do you want to know?"

"Everything."

"That's rather a large order, Ned," she parried, laughing. "Shall I begin with my name, age, color, and previous condition of servitude?"

"Do!" he lightly recommended, devoutly hoping that she would.

"Why be obvious?" she tossed back. "My name you know; my age—you should be able to approximate; my color speaks for itself; and my servitude, past and present, I prefer to forget—when I can. Still, I was prepared to offer them all up in identification when I saw you coming."

"Why?" he boldly challenged.

"O—because. It's so many years——"

"Just how many? Do you remember?" he interrupted, grasping at this opportunity. "I confess to being a little shaky."

"Yes, I remember exactly—but it's more years than you should ask me to count. To be sure, they haven't made much outward and visible impression upon you, but people say I'm changed. You don't find me so?" She looked at him with a doubtful half smile, and he felt that perhaps he had entangled himself in this web quite needlessly. Apparently she had not expected him to recognize her. However, nothing remained to him now but to persevere in the course he had chosen, so he stoutly declared:

"Not a bit. You look just as you always did. Or else it's your voice—or possibly your smile. There are so many characteristics by which one may recognize a friend that it's a little difficult sometimes to decide which is the most potent."

Indeed, he was honestly puzzling over just that point. Something about her—a smile, an inflection, a trick of the eye, he could not quite make out what it was—tormented him by its elusive familiarity, but when he thought he had captured it and fitted it to a memory it was gone.

"You said 'Bobbie' was ill," he reminded her, positive that he had never called any man by that name, but uncertain whether he had ever known this one well enough to allude to him as Bob. "I hope it's not serious—but, of course, if it were you wouldn't be here."

"O, no, it isn't serious—only uncomfortable. It's lumbago. I offered to stay home from the wedding, but Bobbie wouldn't listen to it, so I said I'd come with the Taylors. My conscience hurts, though. Lumbago's such a wicked thing to be left alone with!"

"Salve your conscience, then, by telling me all about 'Bobbie,'" he suggested, smiling again over the name. "Remember how long I've been away, and how I hunger and thirst for news of people. Begin with him, won't you?"

"O, it wouldn't be modest for me to talk about Bobbie," she laughingly protested. "Bobbie's mine, you know, and it isn't pretty to brag. Ask somebody else. No, really."

"Very well," said he, proceeding on the theory that she might be Marion Deering, whom he remembered as a particularly attractive girl with a facile wit, although his mind retained no more impression of her physical appearance than as if it had been a schoolboy's slate washed clean. "If you won't talk about 'Bobbie,' perhaps you'll consent to tell me about Tom—who, by the way, is even a worse correspondent than I am."

"Tom?" she questioned, her head tipped to one side, like a bird's.

"Yes, Tom."

"Tom—O, Tom Deering?"

"Precisely. Tom Deering." Through half closed laughing eyes he watched her.

"He bought a fruit ranch in California several years ago and has lived on it ever since," she glibly told him. "He's married, you know."

"Yes, I know. When did you see him last?"

"I? O—haven't seen him for—for a long time."

"No?" He felt that he was closing in upon her.

"No. By the way, Marion—of course, you remember his sister Marion?"

"Rather!"

"She's in California now, visiting Tom," she informed him, in a casual tone. "I had a letter from her yesterday, bitterly lamenting that she was not to be with us tonight, and sending her love to any of the old set who appeared. I suppose that includes you."

"Thanks." McEwen gave no sign of defeat. "I'm sorry she isn't here, but perhaps she'll return before I go away. She was a good sort in the old days."

Another girl whom he remembered as possessed of sense, sympathy, and humor was Ethel Knapp, who had latterly devoted herself, he had been told, to work in one of the social settlements. Accordingly, he turned the conversation toward philanthropy, and found his friend so responsive that he was confident he had her accounted for at last. But when he left the field of abstract discussion, and asked a question touching specific details, she shook her head.

"I don't know anything about that," she declared. "Ask Ethel Knapp. She lives in one of the settlement houses, you know, and can probably give you all the statistics you want. I think she's to be at the wedding."

Twice again he cautiously felt his way toward girls whom he and Forbes had known, and each time, just as she seemed within grasping distance, his companion swung away from him, and out of the haze surrounding her came that tantalizing, familiar call from the past, whether accent or inflection or smile, he could not yet determine.

"Aren't we going a long way? Do you know where we should get off?"

"We go to Sixty-fifth street, the end of the road," he told her. "It will be a case of 'all out' there, so we can't miss it. Then we take a trolley car for a few blocks, and walk a block. Don't worry. I'll get you there all right.

"Will you?" She let him see a droll twinkle. "Do you remember the night you undertook to pilot a sleighing party from Yonkers to White Plains?" Then they laughed together.

"Well—we got there, anyway," he reminded her.

"Yes, but think of all the other places you meandered into first," she replied.

"By George!" exploded McEwen. "Do you remember that amateur 'Pinafore' we gave? Deering was Rackstraw, and Dolly Bain did the soprano—what's her name? I was Dick Deadeye, and Buttercup—" He stopped short, staring at her.

"Polly Lancaster was Buttercup," she supplied. "Don't you remember Polly?"

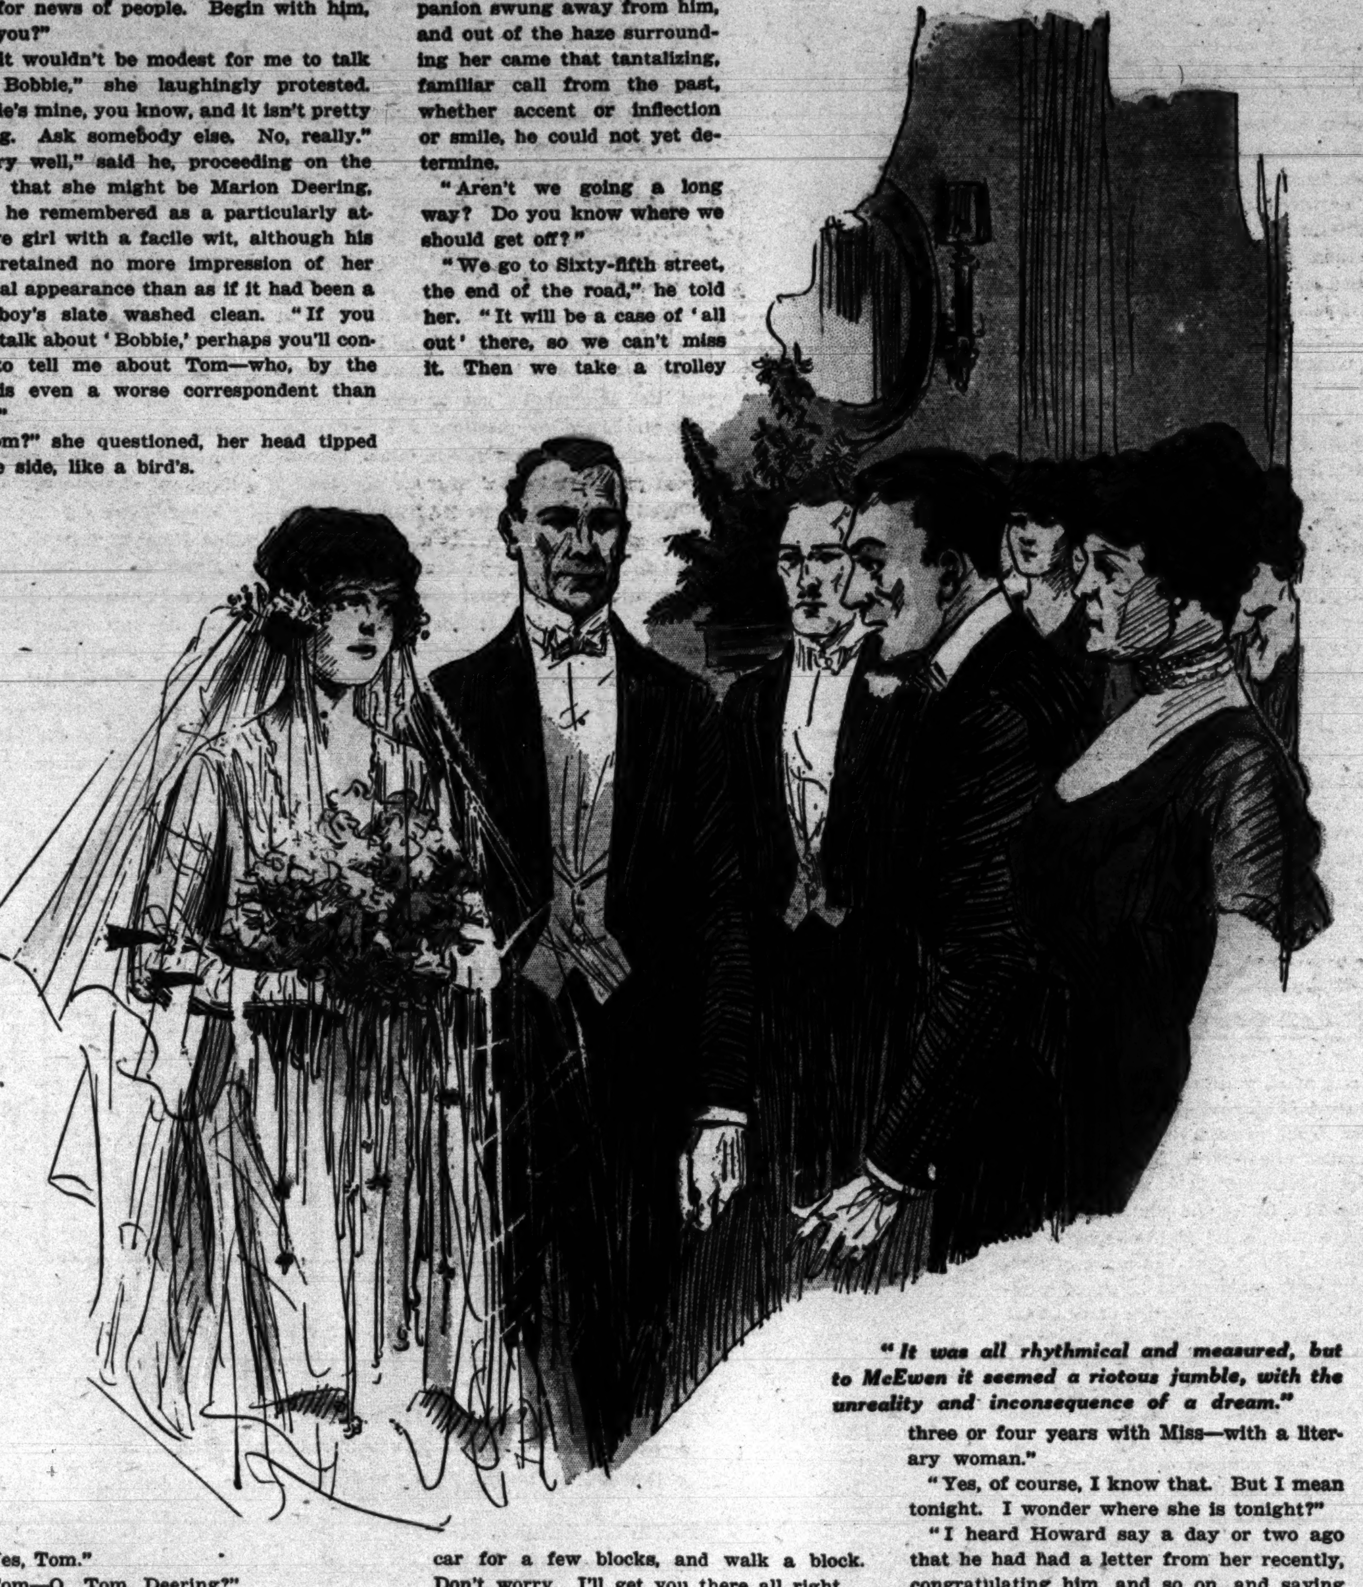
"Remember!" he ejaculated. If he had not known that Polly Lancaster was somewhere in the orient, slaking her thirst for travel as the secretary and companion of a wealthy and peripatetic spinster with literary aspirations, he would have sworn that she was here beside him, going to a wedding in Brooklyn.

She had spent only one winter in New York, visiting her friend Frances King—and in a flash accompanying that memory came the conviction that the puzzle was solved. This must be Frances King. But it was Polly's voice and Polly's laughter and Polly's lilting personality that she recalled to him, which was not surprising, inasmuch as Polly had engaged his attention to the exclusion of pretty much everything else except study that winter. "When I forget Polly Lancaster, I'll be dead," he found himself saying, boyishly. "That was a great winter, wasn't it it?"

"It was the jolliest winter I ever spent," she assented, a trifle wistfully.

"And Polly was the life and soul of it. I wonder where she is now?"

"She's been traveling in the orient for three or four years with Miss—with a literary woman."



"It was all rhythmical and measured, but to McEwen it seemed a riotous jumble, with the unreality and inconsequence of a dream."

"Yes, of course, I know that. But I mean tonight. I wonder where she is tonight?"

"I heard Howard say a day or two ago that he had had a letter from her recently, congratulating him, and so on, and saying that they were just leaving for central India."

"But doesn't she ever say anything about coming home?" he demanded.

"Not a word."

"I suppose she likes it. She always wanted to travel. I wish she would come home. I'd go a long way to see Polly."

"All the way from Mexico here?"

"By George! I just about would!"

"Really? I think that would interest Polly."

"Do you? Why?"

"O—just because. Few people are so well remembered through time and absence." She gave him a glimpse of laughing eyes.

"All right; I'll write to her and tell her so. What's her address?" He felt for his notebook.

"I—I don't think I can give you her address—offhand, this way. I'll send it."

"Will you, please? Thanks." Then it occurred to him that, as had always been the case, he was allowing Polly Lancaster to obliterate Frances King in his consciousness, which was hardly civil, under the circumstances. Except for his inability to remember faces, McEwen had an uncommonly retentive memory, and now that it had a clew to work from it quickly reproduced for him the fragmentary gossip about Frances that had reached him from time to time. She had broken her engagement to Jack Alden—whereupon he remembered, clinching his certainty of her identity, that she had been the other girl of that sleighing party—had married an Englishman whom he had never met, probably "Bobbie," and had spent at least the first year or two of her marriage somewhere out of New York. More than this he had not heard, or, if he had, had forgotten.

"O? Then 'Howard and the rest' did tell you something about me, after all?" Again the quizzical, amused little smile, but this time it did not frighten him.

"Indeed they did," he hastened to claim, "but not as much as they should. And I'd like to know the rest."

"O? Well—if you'll tell me what you already know about me I'll try to fill in the gaps."

"I'm afraid I don't know much about you since your marriage," he confessed, eager to show that he really had recognized her. "They wrote me about the wedding, and that you had gone away, and after that I rather lost track of you. I didn't even know you were back."

"But isn't that quite as it should be? Don't all good stories end with a wedding and 'they lived happily ever after'?"

"I hope you've lived happily ever after?" he ventured.

"O, quite!" And she looked as if she had.

"But where have you lived?"

"Does that matter? Isn't how one lives the important thing?"

"Now, see here, Frances," he remonstrated, "stop your dodging, and answer questions for a minute."

"With pleasure," said she. "Will you first permit me to remark that it's very interesting to learn that you have at last attached a name to my personality?"

"What on earth do you mean by that?"

"'Fess up, Ned! 'Fess up!" she urged. "First you tried Marion, and then you hinted at Ethel, and then you wiggled carefully toward Grace——"

"Suffering Mike!" he scoffed. "Can't a returned prodigal ask a lady about a few other ladies without being accused by the lady of not knowing any lady from any other lady? You'll be telling somebody, next, that I took you for Polly Lancaster, just because I mentioned her name!"

"No, I won't! I acquit you of that!" she declared, laughing. "So you still say that you knew me from the first?"

"Well, I remembered all about 'Bobbie,' didn't I?" he submitted, whereat a delighted little gurgle of laughter broke from her. "Doesn't that prove it? Is there any 'Bobbie' connected with any of those other girls?"

"Not one!" she assured him. "I have the only Bobbie there is. And you did remember him, didn't you? I'd forgotten that for the moment. I'll forgive you much for that!"

"Well, are you satisfied now?" he demanded.

"Perfectly! Perfectly! Ned, you're adorable! Such a proper, upstanding, man-ny sort of a man!"

"Thank you kindly! Now go on. Tell me all about yourself since I lost sight of you."

"Well—you heard about the wedding. For a year or two we traveled. Then Mr. Chichester——"

"'Bobbie'?"

"Who else?" She smiled happily. "He is, as you may know, an Englishman, and he became enamoured of Australia, so he bought a big place there, and settled down to farming on a large scale."

"The deuce! You don't look like a farmer's wife." She wrinkled her nose at him saucily. "Do you like it?"

"Didn't I tell you in the beginning that I preferred to forget my servitude? Why force me to talk about it?"

"Then you don't like it."

"I like—Bobbie."

"Lucky beggar! So you've settled down in Australia? How long have you been here?"

"Only a few days."

"When did you see Polly last? You've no idea how you remind me of her!"

"Polly and I haven't met in—longer than you'd believe. Why do you keep insisting on dates? They're so unpleasant!"

"Well, let's talk about happy things, then. Do you remember——"

They drifted into reminiscences, over which they were still laughing when the train stopped and the guard called, "All out!" On the platform they found several surface cars waiting, and toward one of them McEwen guided his companion.

"Ned, would it be of the slightest use to ask you to inquire about this car and be sure it's the one we want?" she plaintively questioned.

"Not a bit," said he, with amusement. "You haven't any faith at all in me, have you? Do you see the illuminated sign this car flaunts? That same legend is writ out clear and fair in the directions Howard sent me. Moreover, do you behold all these other festive wedding guests piling in ahead of us?"

They entered the car and dropped again into their reminiscent chat. Presently she asked if they were not going too far, and he replied, easily, that it was "all right." A moment later the car stopped and they left it, immediately behind the younger party whom they had noticed on the train, and whom they now followed to a large, gayly lighted house in the next street.

As they passed under the carriage awning, McEwen felt his companion hesitate, and he asked, looking down at her:

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing—much," she replied, and moved on toward the steps.

They had almost reached the top of the stairs leading to the dressing rooms when some one above them exclaimed:

"Hear that?" whispered McEwen. "Can you go down at once?"

"Don't wait for me," she hastily returned. "No—I insist! Somebody stepped on my gown as we came in, and it may have to be fixed, but that's no reason why you should miss the ceremony. Go down immediately—you can find me later. Please!" Nodding brightly, she disappeared in the ladies' dressing room.

McEwen found no one whom he knew in the men's cloakroom, which was not surprising, but he was a little puzzled when, on descending to the main floor, he met no one who knew him. One or two faces among the men looked vaguely familiar; but as his half smile won no response he was afraid to trust his uncertain memory, and did not venture to claim acquaintance. He bowed over the hand of the woman receiving, and murmured his name, but others pressed close behind him, and there was time for nothing more.

Presently there was a stir and a whisper, the people crowded back toward the walls, the first strains of "Lohengrin" came from the hall, and the ushers marched in, two by two, carrying ribbons. A white cassocked clergyman appeared near the altar, but among the men about him McEwen looked in vain for a familiar face. A pink mist of bridesmaids floated past him, and the bride, a very young girl with starry eyes fixed on a youth who presently received her from her father's arm.

It was all rhythmical and measured, but to McEwen it seemed a riotous jumble, with the unreality and inconsequence of a dream, and, before his dazed wits cleared enough to show him that he had followed the party of young people to the wrong house and was attending the wedding of people he had never seen before, the music had ceased and the priest had begun to speak.

McEwen gave one desperate, hunted glance around him, but he was hemmed in on all sides; every one else was intent on the ceremony, and to force his way out then would be but to increase the offense of which he was guilty. There was nothing for it but to remain until these pretty children were married, and then to get away as quickly as possible.

It seemed to him that of all the interminable marriage ceremonies to which he had ever listened this was the longest; but in time it was over, and he struggled against the chattering, congratulatory tide to the hall, whence he dispatched a servant to find the host, while he busied himself vainly trying to discover the woman who had come there with him.

Mr. Denslow, whose house it was, arrived duly, and to him McEwen presented his card, his explanation, and his apologies, after which he hurried upstairs. At the door of the ladies' cloakroom he was met by a smiling maid, who asked:

"Ar-re ye Mr. McEw'n?"

"I am, yes. Is there a lady——"

"No, sor; she's gon'."

"Gone!"

"Yis, sor. But she lift this fer ye, sor. She said ye'd be racin' up here directly 'twas over."

McEwen opened the note, merely a half sheet of paper, folded, and read:

"Dear Ned: I've gone to Howard's wedding. The man at the door will tell you the way—if you'll ask him."

"How long has she been gone?" he demanded.

"O, she niver tuk her t'ings off at all, at all. She said she forgot somethin', an' I was to give you this, an' off she wint, almost runnin'."

"I see. Thank you." He gave the girl a coin, thrust himself into his hat and coat, and fled. At the outer door he paused to ask of a man in livery:

"Can you tell me where Mr. Keeler lives?"

"Yes, sir. Four blocks down to the left and one to the right, sir."

Four blocks to the left and one to the right McEwen went, and there he came to another gayly lighted house with awnings and carriages and sounds of mirth and music. He slipped in quietly, and managed to get upstairs unobserved by any but the servants, but as soon as he showed himself again in the lower hall a man started out of a group, crying:

"As I live, there's Ned McEwen!"

"Say, you fellows, has anybody seen Frances come in?" demanded the newcomer as soon as he could make himself heard over the babel of welcome.

"Frances?" The other men looked blankly at one another. "Who's Frances?"

"Frances King—Frances Chichester she is now."

"Frances King! Good Lord, man, she's in the Antipodes," somebody told him. "She lives in Australia."

"Yes, I know, but she's here tonight. Yes, she is. She came over on the train with me, but we—we got separated, and if she isn't here, I've got to find her."

Waiting for no further argument, he strode into the drawing room, two or three of his old comrades, wondering, at his heels. As they approached the thicker crowd about the newly married pair, McEwen paused.

"There she is!" he said to the man with him. "There's Frances King, talking to that young woman in yellow.

"Frances King, your grandmother! That's Polly Lancaster."

McEwen gave the speaker one stricken look and marched straight to judgment.

"We had all our plans made to go into central India," she was saying, as he paused behind her, "but then the cable came saying Miss Robertson's play was to be put into rehearsal at once, so we hurried home immediately."

"They're all saying that it's really your play," said the woman in yellow.

"It isn't my play at all," indignantly disclaimed Polly. "I never created anything in my life—except a playwright, and I'm very proud of her. She was trying to write a poor novel, and I made her see that it was a good play. That's all I had to do with it."

"Well, Polly Lancaster?" said McEwen, in her ear.

"O," said she, calmly turning toward him, "are you quite sure of me this time? You must have asked somebody."

"I didn't," he said. "You always find out if you wait a little and use your gray matter."

"If you don't die first," added Miss Lancaster. "Was it a pretty wedding?"

"Hang the wedding!"

"O, no! It's Easter week, Ned, and the proper time for weddings. There's one on nearly every bush tonight."

"Hm! So I've learned."

"I dare say you might locate a few more in this neighborhood—if you'd ask," she soberly reflected, a laughing devil in her eye. "Or you might even discover a belated wedding guest whom you could follow to the door, and so save your pride."

"Only one wedding will ever interest me very much now," he said, "and that will be yours. Polly, who's 'Bobbie'?"

"O, have you forgotten again?" she grieved. "You were so sure of him a little while ago."

"'As you are strong'—" he begged, and left the quotation unfinished. "Haven't you reduced me to pulp? Am I not asking? Who is 'Bobbie'?"

"Bobbie is my own private and particular pet name for Eleanor Robertson, the woman I work for."

"The woman! Thank the Lord!" fervently breathed McEwen; and then, no less fervently, "You imp!"

Back To DIXIE by ONEY FRED SWEET

"Tote" Hang Out Until He Had Returned to the Land of "Old Black Joe."

"TOTE" ROGERS, colored, was driving an army truck just back of the lines in France when a carelessly aimed hunk of Hun ammunition had sent him to the hospital. From the hospital he had been returned to the land of his birth. The war was over, for Tote. He was on his way back to Alabama—a point far removed from the burst of shrapnel. And Dixie was calling Tote—the Dixie he had left three years before to try the north.

There was no one to meet Tote at the little station down in Alabama. He had sent no word ahead. Night had fallen over the town among the cotton fields. A recent participant in the biggest mixup between nations that the old world had ever known, his brain still dizzy with war zone impressions, Tote limped down the old street that was as unchanged as the night when he had stolen away. And the street was very quiet. There was no one about.

Tote threw away the butt of a cigaret as he turned in at the gate of the whitewashed cabin where lived his grandpap, Old Black Joe. The place was in silence, and it was as dark within as Tote's own skin. The door was wide open. There was nothing around that was worth carrying away. It was like all the other cabins along the street, and yet it was not as the others to Tote. He had played on this particular cabin floor as a pickaninny.

"Whah is you all, Uncle Joe?"

There was no answer.

"Heah I is, Uncle Joe—Tote."

Insects hummed in the shadows.

Tote was very tired. He took the chair on the porch and leaned back against the whitewashed wall. Very deliberately he rolled a cigaret.

"Reckon ah done lost my pep," he sighed. "Ma goodness, this yeah am suah a long way from the trenches."

He touched his injured arm gingerly, groaned. But he was back home. No bugle call would arouse him. He nodded in half sleep.

. . . .

Old Black Joe would have been at home ordinarily. He would have been sitting in the chair in which his grandson now sat. But a carnival had come to town, and Joe, in spite of his years, could not resist a band which contained a slide trombone.

The whole town was at the carnival. Cotton was high in price. Times were good. The merry-go-round with its action and its lights and its organ that groaned out "Joanofarctheyarecallingyou," off key, was doing a wonderful business.

Joe was moving among the crowd. It was a new generation of Negroes for the most part. The young folks were snappily dressed.

"Evenin'," greeted Uncle Joe.

"Evenin'."

"How's all youh folks?"

"Tollable. I specks you know my boy Edward has got him one of dem new automobeels. Yas, sah, done mighty well raisin' cotton on share."

"Don' say."

Two yellow girls in their teens, short skirted and filmy waisted, strolled past in company with two black youths who carried their coats on their arms that the hue of their gorgeous silk shirts might be fully revealed.

"Gone were the days."

A black boy with his cap so twisted that the peak of it was at the back of his woolly head almost upset Joe in trying to escape a playful companion. A chocolate colored lad, breezing along with a girl whose face had been powdered until it was purple, ignored Joe's presence altogether. The organ on the merry-go-round continued to grind "Joanofarctheyarecallingyou."

"Gone are the days," hummed Joe in his heart.

An automobile came chugging and honking into the carnival grounds. Eight pairs of eyes gleamed and eight pairs of lips were parted in smiles beneath the one canopy.

"Evenin', Joe," greeted the darkey at the steering wheel.

Old Black Joe rubbed his eyes.

"What you all mean, niggah, drivin' one of them things?"

"It am mine, Uncle Joe."

"The Lo'd help me."

"Get right in, Uncle Joe."

"Get that thing out of the way, niggah," raved Joe, backing away and waving his cane.

The car chugged on. "Gone were the days" indeed.

Old Black Joe had hoed many a row of cotton in his day, but he had never sold any of it at high price and bought automobiles. He listened to the merry-go-round a bit longer, took a last glimpse of the revelry through age bleared eyes, and started for home.

. . . .

"Evenin', Uncle Joe."

"It am me—Tote."

The aged darkey crept cautiously to feel of the youth in the darkness.

"Ah declah it am. When you get back, niggah? Whah you all been?"

"Don' tech that arm!"

"I done tole you not to go up no'th, niggah. I done tole you to stay right yeah. Ma goodness, I see mo' niggahs at de carnival. What you 'spose they all doin'? Ridin' aroun' in automobeels. That low set niggah, Eddie Johnson, got one. An' Henry Lee—he suah take me by s'prise, ridin' right up in one of dem things of his own makin' a noise. Lots happen aroun' heah, Tote, since you gone."

The youth, leaning against the whitewashed side of the cabin, listened to the old darkey's enthusiasm. Then he winced as a sudden pain darted through his wrecked side. Whenever that particular pain came there came with it the vision of the front in France with all its chaos and precision—the horrors, the thrills, the thousand days in one that were a part of the terrific clash between the world's nations.

"Yes, sah," Old Black Joe rattled on, "they done have a merry-go-round organ down dah dat was mighty fine. All the niggahs ridin' around. Cotton done sold high, Tote. I tole you not to go way up no'th. Dixie am de place fo' de niggah."

"Would you all light de lamp, Uncle Joe?"

"I declah I done broke dat lamp. Yas, sah; all these niggahs aroun' heah gettin' automobeels. An' you 'member that Johnson gal you used to call on. She's done married, Tote. Ah tole you not to go off up no'th."

"I'se mighty tired, Uncle Joe."

"Ti'd? Nevah used to be, niggah. Used to be singin' wi' the rest of de boys half de night. Ma goodness, them old songs! This heah merry-go-round had a new song. Nothin' like 'Swanee Ribber' nor 'Massa's in de Col', Col' Ground.' Youh mammy used to sing all them songs. Use to sing 'em befo' she crossed de Jo'don."

"Would you get me a glass of water, Uncle Joe?"

"An' if you'll just help me in to de bed. Don' tech that arm, Uncle Joe."

"Tote!"

For the first time the aged darkey realized the bandages, caught the tone of pain in the boy's voice. "Tote, niggah," he exclaimed, "whah you all been? What you all been doin'?"

The youth shut his eyes, dropped carefully against the patched quilt.

"Bin drivin' one of them automobeels, Uncle Joe."

"I done tol' dat niggah out at de carnival I wouldn't ride in 'em. Dey's dang'rous. Uncle Joe allus says dey was."

Insects hummed out in the shadows.

"De automobeels ain' so dang'rous," finished Tote as his black eyelids closed, "but yous got to be right sma't keerful whah you drive 'em."

A CASE of A LIEE PENANCE by H. R. R. Hertzberg

Though She Was Young and Fair, He Was Rude to Stare; But Now She Doesn't Care as Much as She Did.

PAUL VAN DER DYKE—whom real connoisseurs and critics called one of the country's chief artistic hopes—was leaving the big city for a few days' visit to the seaside summer place of his friends the Ashleys, at Silver Beach, some eighty miles away. As he awaited, on an "L" station platform, a train that would take him to the Grand Central depot, he became most pleasantly aware of an extremely pretty young girl standing quite near him.

An extremely pretty young girl—that was merely his first impression, the first impression which—slightly to paraphrase the language of the law in the definition of equity—is deficient by reason of its superficiality. The second glance showed him that she was a great deal more than only pretty, was radiantly yet tenderly beautiful. And the third proved to him her possession of that mysterious thing vaguely known as personality, of individual character, and of vivid intelligence, for all her unmistakably evident youthfulness.

Then there was no fourth, or fifth, or sixth, or seventh glance, but only one continuous gaze. Unconsciously, quite innocently, the painter stood and stared at the girl. Of course she knew that he did so, though she did not seem to look in his direction.

A train halted at the station. It was Paul's train, and Paul entered the car into which the girl had lightly stepped. There he sat across the aisle from her, in one of the side seats at the end.

Again, and immediately, his eyes riveted themselves to the girl. He had a full face view of her now. Gad, but she was paintable! Those splendid, great, luminous, black silk lashed, gray-blue Irish eyes—the eyes that are the true glory of Ireland, he thought. That honest red mouth—not too red—with its firm gentleness, yes, and the hint of a smile dimple at the corners of the lips. That pure, proud white brow under wavy brown hair—the brown which glows red in the sunshine. Paintable! Aye, and lovable, too; lovable, too—lovable, too—the words repeated themselves in his ego.

She rose at the conductor's call of "Fuffty-suvventh!" Paul Van Der Dyke followed her to the street childishly glad. And his gladness increased when she crossed the avenue toward the depot where he too was going.

Having reached the ticket office, the girl, just ahead of the artist, called for a ticket to—of all places!—Silver Beach. Paul's gladness grew into joy. He had a way of stuttering a trifle—only when he was greatly pleased—and he stuttered decidedly as, while the girl somewhat nervously stuffed her ticket and change into her purse, he told the man at the window: "A ticket for—er—S—S—Silver Beach."

In the chair car the girl managed to bury as much of her face as she could in one of the train "butcher's" weeklies. The painter must perforce rest content with a long, very long, glimpse of a part of her delicately chiseled profile, except when she glanced at him quickly once or twice. Why did she look ill at ease, almost afraid, he wondered in perfect innocence.

Arrived at Silver Beach, the girl raced—"raced" is the word—to a street car marked "South End." Since the Ashleys lived at the South End, Van Der Dyke boarded the same car. And then he once more wondered somewhat because of the constant restlessness of the girl's slender hands and feet.

"Seaside Avenoo-oo!" croaked the conductor.

Van Der Dyke's destination. The Ashleys dwelt on Seaside avenue, three blocks from this corner. The girl preceded Paul in leaving the car.

The summer sun had set, but there remained light enough to let him see that the girl was really, thoroughly frightened, was actually trembling.

Like a gallant latter day knight, he went to the "fair ladye's" side, meaning to serve her if he could. But he had barely doffed his hat when with a little cry she ran away.

No farther than half a dozen steps. A big policeman, of the younger and most vastly important variety, had just appeared, just turned the corner. She addressed herself to him:

"This man there—he has—been following—and—and—he was about to speak—and—and——"

"'Tis all roight, miss, I seen 'im at it," said the bluecoat. "Don't ye worry, ye needn't show up in coort at all. I'll fix him, sure."

On Paul's arm fell the law's large, heavy hand.

"C'm awn along down ter headquar-ters," the policeman ordered the artist. "Aw, c'm awn—there ain't no use in jawin'—ye're guilty ez hell, ye masher. Ain't I seen?"

Of the two guests expected at the Ashleys that day, only one had put in an appearance. And this one was doing what is—fortunately—incorrectly described as "crying her pretty eyes out" on the matronly bosom of the Ashley better half, the Ashley worse half looking on in silence.

Between sobs and tears the tale was told of him who stared and stared and stared and followed her from spot to spot and——

"What was he like?" asked Mr. Ashley.

"O, he looked—he looked a gentleman, you know—tall, fairly young—not coarse or dissipated in the least—distingué, rather—blonde—a pointed beard—well dressed——"

"Did he wear glasses?"

"Good-bye!" cried Mr. Ashley. And he made a rapid exit.

Three days passed on ere Kathlyn Tracy could work up her courage to the seeking of a tête-à-tête with Van Der Dyke. On the fourth day she did.

Brave both of heart and soul, she could confess a wrong humbly and fully. Her confession to the man whom she had sent to jail (though but for half an hour) was faultlessly complete and humble.

"Just a silly goose I was," said she, "a great big little fool. There's no excuse for me except, perhaps, that I had never traveled all alone and that I'd heard a lot of awful tales about those—masher persons. So, you see, when you kept staring at me—O, and how you stared!——"

Van Der Dyke nodded:

"You must understand: I am a painter, and you're paintable."

She blushed a bit as she continued

"And especially when at the depot in the city you—stammered over the name of 'Silver Beach' as if you'd never heard of it before I mentioned it, and—I grew more afraid each second, till I went crazy with fright at last. But, still, I was a wicked little fool. I had no right to act so stupidly—and I'm ashamed and honestly repentant. Will you please forgive me? Please!"

It took a lot of self-control on Paul's part to refrain from telling her:

"Kathleen—mavourneen—with the wondrous eyes, you blessed bundle of true bravery and purity and honesty and all that's good and sweet and lovely, there is not a thing to be forgiven, not a thing."

However, he controlled himself and said:

"Well, I am not an unforgiving chap. But absolution is not valid, quite, is it, unless a penance is imposed?"

"No," granted Kathleen.

"Such being the case, will you perform the penance I assign?"

Shining out of his eyes was something that made Kathleen's heart beat fast and happily.

He took her hands and drew her close.

"Hear, then, your penance. It's a heavy one, to be done faithfully your whole life long—and lovingly, too, darling—as my wife. Do you accept it?"

The girl's lips said yes to his, without a word.

Although they've been married five years, the Van Der Dykes are still such flagrant lovers that Kathleen can well afford to smile most genuinely when she sometimes warns her husband not to stare at one or 'tother pretty girl, "because, you know, your staring habit once got you into deep, serious trouble, which is with you yet!" And Paul can smile as joyously as she.

Apropos of the couple's happiness, good Mrs. Ashley, by a curious twist of womankind's peculiar logic, claims that it was she who made the model match.

inner pocket, started slowly down the street, looked into the faces of those he met. Coming toward him was a portly and palpably prosperous person. Chili stepped up to him and touched him on the forearm.

"I want you," he said, quietly.

The stranger looked up, shocked and puzzled.

"I'm a police officer. I have a warrant in my pocket for your arrest," whispered Carney.

The man turned sickly pale.

"F-for m-m-me?" he gasped.

"You said it—c'mon."

The prisoner trembled and almost collapsed. Rivulets of perspiration flowed from his temples down under his correct collar.

"Wh-hat's it all about?" he begged.

"Can't argue it out with you here," said Chili. "You'll have to come to headquarters."

And the detective led the limp and frightened one to the chief's office, sat him into a chair, drew himself up before him, set his jaw at a cruel third degree angle, and began:

"You're charged wit' larceny. Are you guilty, or——"

"Who makes the charge?" groaned the "suspect."

"The chief o' p'lice—his name is signed to the warrant. Now, don't ask no lot o' questions, becus you're here to answer 'em—it's you, not me, what's got to come t'rough. Now, you heard my question: Are you guilty o' larceny? Have you stolen, taken, or converted prop'ty belongin' to some one else?"

"Well," began the prisoner, "you see, that is a broad query. There is a great deal of doubt as to just what constitutes conversion, or taking, and just what constitutes property. In my business it frequently becomes necessary to take over certain assets from others to myself and my associates in the corporations in which I am interested.

"Larceny is a harsh term. Before I can answer I should like to have the advice of my attorney. You see, the line between larceny and business is a fine one—often times merely an imaginary boundary, so to speak. If I knew the specific accusation against me I might venture an answer and an explanation. But when you charge me in the dark with the offense I am at a loss for a reply. It is possible that I may have transgressed the laws—they are so complicated and perplexing, you know. As far as I know I have remained within the law. I—you see—that is——"

Kelly and Kiernan, who had been across the street for a little moist inspiration and irrigation, walked in at this moment. With one horrified lunge they both made Carney's side.

"What's this about?" cried Kelly to Carney.

"What's the trouble?" cried Kiernan to the prisoner.

"I served the warrant," said Carney to Kelly.

"This—this gentlem—this man says I am under arrest, charged with larceny," said the prisoner to Kiernan.

"Well, I'll be doggoned," cried Kelly and Kiernan.

"C-can you shed any light on this?" asked the prisoner.

"'Ts all right—mistaken identity—you kin go," said Kelly.

The color worked back into the ashen cheeks of the man as he arose, put out a spiritless hand to his deliverer, thanked him, walked out of the door.

"Where'd you get that kind o' crazy stuff?" yelled Kelly to Carney.

"I was give a warrant to serve, an' I served it," answered Chili.

"Go on—you was a bein' kidded. Can't you take a joke?"

"Not me. John Doe is John Doe, an' John Doe is anybody. So I picks the firs' guy I see what reads to me like he's full o' larceny, an' I haul him in. An' if you would o' give me five minutes more I'd a had a confession. I had him wingin' when you come in."

"You're crazy," yelled Kiernan at him. "That party was the president o' one o' the biggest banks in town."

"Right," said Carney. "He wasn' expectin' to be took in, so I catches him off his guard, an' he all but pled guilty. Well, since you turns him out, I guess I'll go an' nail somebody else."

"You don' leave this here buildin' again wit' that nut warrant," commanded Kiernan.

"An' why not? If the guy I brung in wasn' the right one, I'll go an' cop the one what is. I wasn' give no instructions about where to find him or what he done. So I figgered it covered anybody what I could hook a larceny charge onto. Well, lemme go wit' that warrant. I'll fill ev'ry coop in the bandhouse an' have a overflow. That there is the easiest warrant to serve what ever was handed to me.

"You thought you was kiddin' somebody, huh?

"Let it go at that, then. I'm the sucker in this new game—or is it one o' your old pranks?

"The test of a good sucker, I b'lieve, is not to welch when the laugh is on him, but to go t'rough wit' the joke. That's me. You gimme a warrant to serve. Well, I'm gonna serve it."

And he started for the door again.

Kelly and Kiernan jumped ahead and blocked the exit. They threatened, begged, argued, cursed, demanded. Carney was obdurate.

The chief had never been let in on the hazing and bullyragging of the fresh men in his department, but Kelly, weighing the comparative perils between letting Carney go forth with the dangerous warrant and exposing the jesting proclivities of himself and his crony to the high guy, decided for the latter, ran in while Kiernan held the stubborn and determined Carney, and came back with the head of the department himself.

Carney quit struggling when his commander entered.

"What's the idee o' fightin'—is that what I transferred you up her for?" he sternly asked of Carney.

"I'm fightin' for the right to do my work," said Carney. "I was give a warrant to serve, an' I wanna serve it, that's all. Now these here two dicks wants me to give up the warrant an' have a black mark against my record that I flopped on the firs' job shoved at me."

"Let's see the warrant," ordered the chief.

Chili produced it.

His nibs examined it quizzically, then turned on Kelly and Kiernan and inquired querulously:

"Who sprung this piece o' foolishness?"

They had to admit that they had conceived and executed the delicate pleasantry.

In the presence of the newest member of the chief's bunch the two oldest thereof got theirs, good and sufficient.

"And you was gonna finish this here tomfoolery?" asked the chief of Carney.

"Sure. I got a record to keep up. When anybody hands me a warrant I hand him the pris'ner. I've put across some tough ones. How could I pass up one as easy as this?"

"Well, forget it," said the chief. "I'll attend to Kelly an' Kiernan for this. I don' stand for no monkeyshines up here. An' as for you, come on in an' I'll give you a good warrant or two to serve.

"This is about the mos' dangerous joke I ever heard of.

"Why, say—wit' that hunk o' paper you could upset this town. John Doe—that name fits anybody. Larceny—say, that fits almos' anybody! There ain' no glory in servin' that warrant. You couldn' hardly miss wit' it. It's like shootin' wit' a double barrel shotgun into a mob at ten feet."

"Whew!"

John Doe, Larceny

by Jack Lait

Citizen Doe Has Been Charged with Many Crimes.

THERE are a great many misconceptions in the minds of the laity as to the exact duties of big town detectives. Most folk think, I fancy, that the detective's life is a round of snooping, spying, keyhole eavesdropping, and inquisition of thieves with records who would "shoot square" were it not for the persistent persecution of detectives who have graven on their hearts "Once a crook, always a crook."

In truth, about half of the detectives do nothing more than serve warrants, and the other half serve warrants half the time.

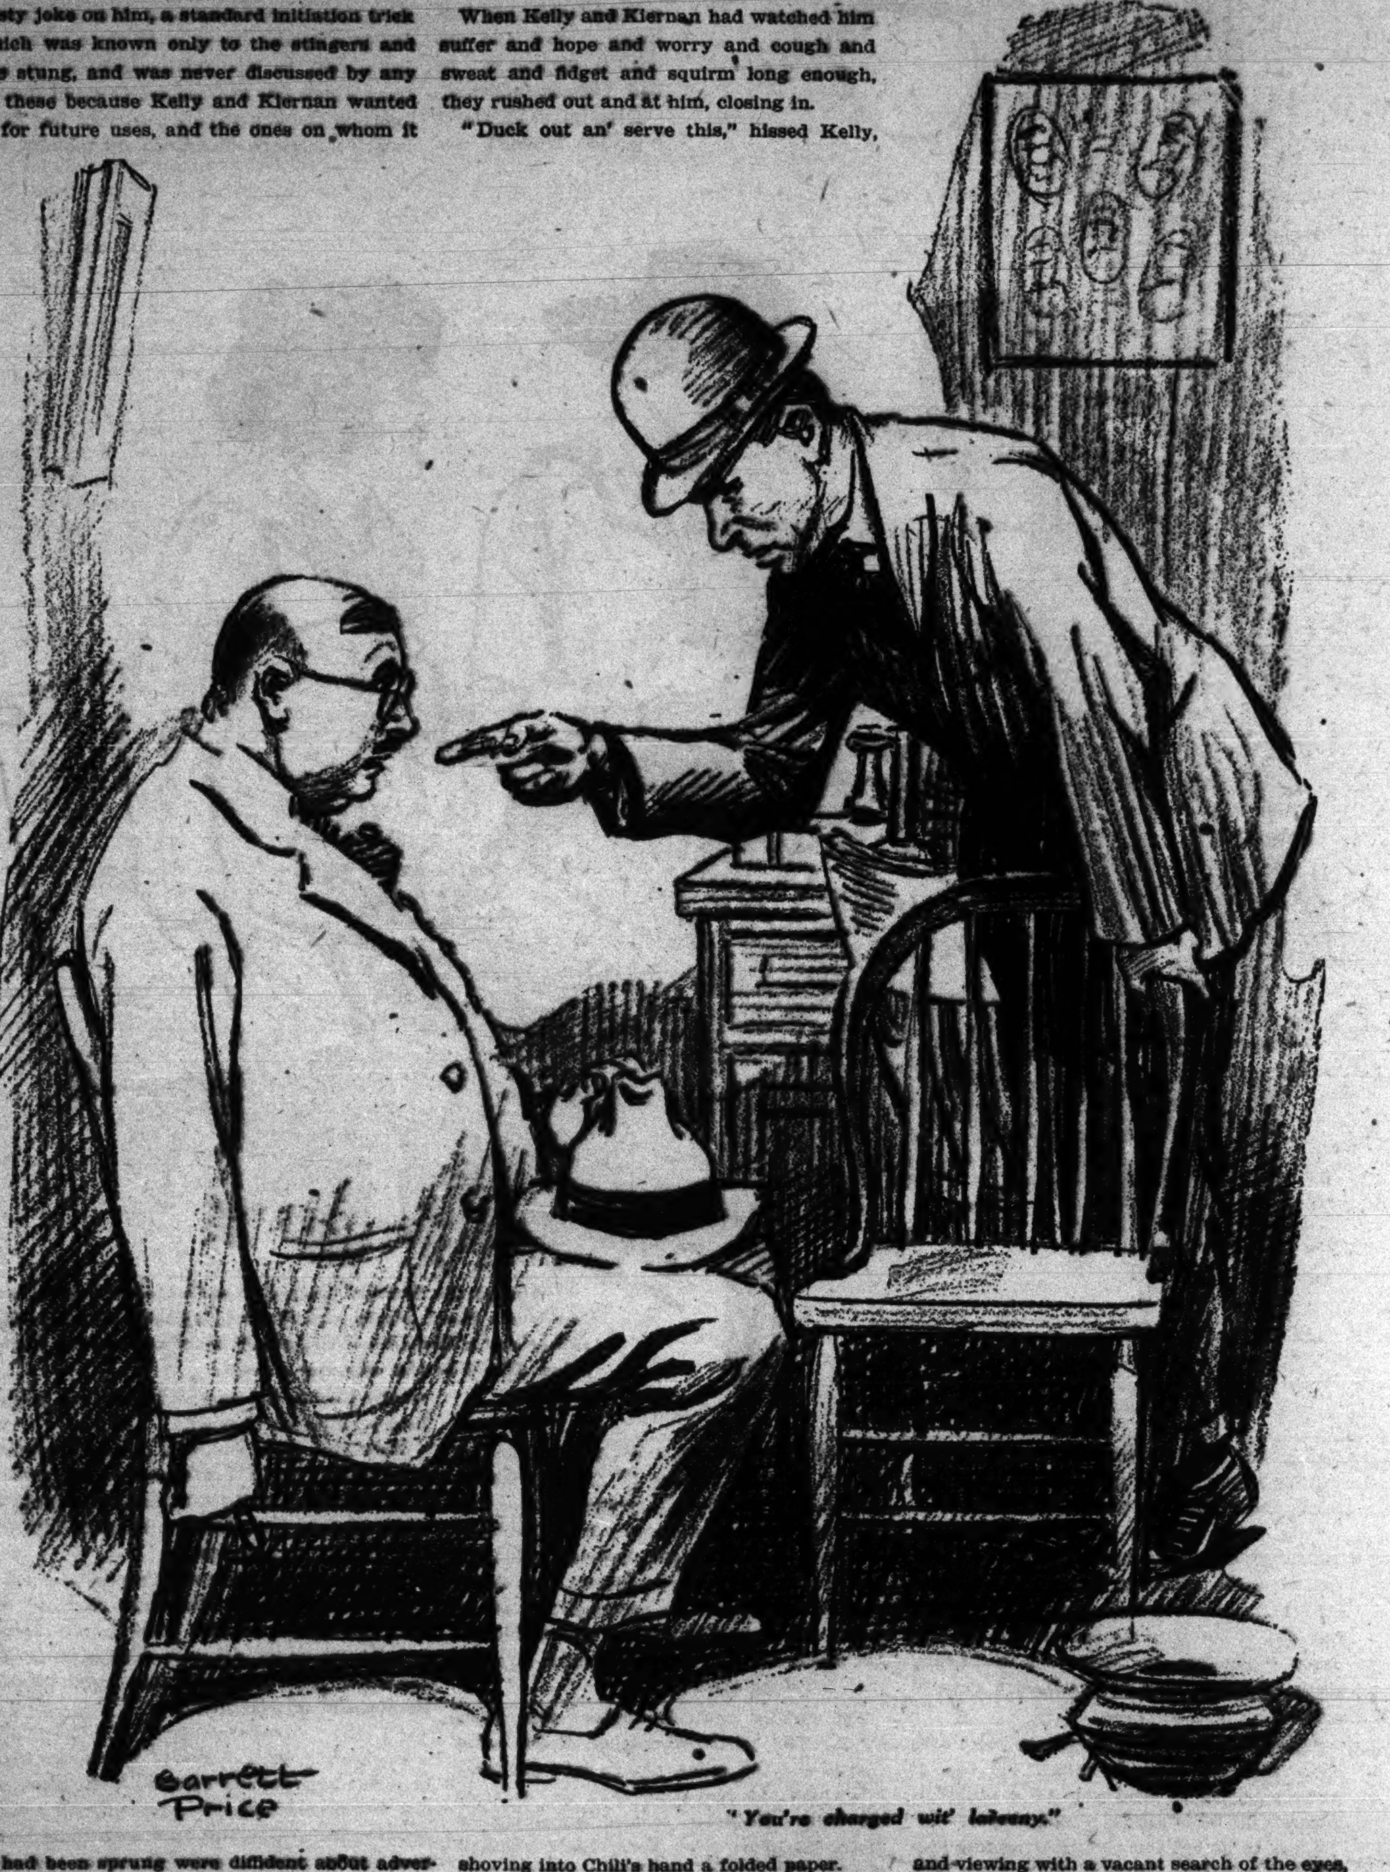
The ceremony of formally acquainting the accused with the bad news that a citizen has signed a paper testifying that to the best of his knowledge and belief accused has kicked the law in the face, is no simple job at that. It requires pertinacity, sagacity, and, ofttimes, a lot of grit. There are two principal duties connected with it—making sure to hang the warrant on the proper person and making sure not to hang it on any person other than the proper person. The reason for the first is obvious; the reason for the second is that municipalities may be sued and false arrest is easily and heavily actionable, besides the general disinclination of human beings against visiting injustice and embarrassment on innocent people; also, lots of folks have friends in politics.

Therefore, a skillful warrant server is a mighty asset to any police department, and he is regarded as a craftsman and an artist. Certain of every city's detectives have attained reputations and standing for high efficiency in finding the right wrong person at home and bringing the aforesaid out of his home; thus bringing home the bacon.

In a large town—any large town will do, because this is fiction and fits any city larger than Bucyrus, as well as most smaller places, except that they do not employ plainclothes detectives—dwelt there a pair of "front office dicks" named, respectively, Kelly and Kiernan. A "dick" is a detective; he is also a "bull," a "flatfoot," a "copper," a "redneck," a "hopper," and a "gumshoe." A uniformed policeman is a "harness bull," the "harness" being his uniform. The "front office" is the retreat of the chief, and, therefore, a front office dick is a policeman in citizen's clothes who works, or, as it is expressed, "travels," from or "out of" the chief's office, being therefore a confidential and tried performer.

Kelly and Kiernan did all 'round detecting. They were veterans, and they had veterans' ideas of humor as against the poor simps whom they served, either with warrants or with ennui, and a raucous contempt for other dicks less proficient, experienced, or lucky than themselves. Whenever the chief elevated to the front office squad a man out of a wayside precinct or the mean mob of the general detective bureau, Kelly and Kiernan made life as hard for him in their good natured way as possible, and figuratively put bent pins in his chair and sent him out after left handed monkey wrenches.

The work of Cornelius Carney, abbreviated to Con Carney, and thereafter nicknamed Chili Con Carney and hailed as Chili, had stood out. He was one of the younger flatfoots in the bad lands, and had taken a few records as a wingshot with warrants for ammunition, having dragged in prisoners where older men had failed and had turned back the papers marked "Can't be found." In a brief time the department rang with the envious admission that Chili could bring back a suspect through smoke or high water, and that a man whose name was written on the dotted line of a warrant in Chili's hand was as good as in jail.



"You're charged wit' larceny."

The chief's pets had not been batting very tellingly, so he transferred Chili into his cabinet corps "for the good of the service," and turned him over to Sergts. Kelly and Kiernan for duty. They looked him over as though to say, "So—you're the bearcat bull, eh? Well, we'll see."

Chili was rapidly and briefly "wised" on the especial ethics of his new headquarters, and then Kelly and Kiernan sprung their dusty joke on him, a standard initiation trick which was known only to the stingers and the stung, and was never discussed by any of these because Kelly and Kiernan wanted it for future uses, and the ones on whom it had been sprung were diffident about advertising themselves as goats.

"Quite a few," said Chili.

"I hear this bird can pinch the right pris'ner even when the warrant reads the wrong name," said Kiernan to Kelly, with burlesque admiration.

"If the guy is alive an' you gimme time enough I'll turn him up an' I'll turn him in," said Chili, with a true detective's modesty.

"Fine," said Kelly to Chili. "Sit down—I'll have a warrant for you after a while."

Chili sat and Kelly and Kiernan withdrew to chuckle and to set the trap.

They let the new star wait, get "cold," look anxiously toward the closed door numerous times, wonder when his first crack at real fame would come, let a fear drift through him that just now, when it counted so decisively, it might be just his luck to be sent after some one whom he could not find—some one, perhaps, that couldn't be found. Chili was mentally brushing up on all his favorite and surefire methods, determined to apply the pat one to the critical first case to come.

When Kelly and Kiernan had watched him suffer and hope and worry and cough and sweat and fidget and squirm long enough, they rushed out and at him, closing in.

"Duck out an' serve this," hissed Kelly, shoving into Chili's hand a folded paper.

"An' don't come back wit'out your man," popped Kiernan at him, as the two all but lifted him from his chair to start him toward the door.

The ambitious Carney dashed forth, gained the sidewalk, then unfolded the document and read. His forehead puckered, his lips banged out a round of fitting police profanity—he had been tricked, "framed!"

The warrant was a dusty and faded sheet charging larceny against one John Doe.

The excellent Doe, as every one is aware, is a mythical citizen against whose name every crime in the code has been charged. He stands in loco personnis for accused whose names are unknown to the accusers or whose names must be kept a secret from the records until they are safely jailed, or whose names cannot be known, as in cases where warrants are prepared in anticipation of misdeeds. Once landed as John Doe, the prisoner may protest and be booked under his proper name, or he can stand trial and "do time" as just another Doe gone wrong.

Now, had Kelly and Kiernan slipped Chili a warrant such as he was just now holding and viewing with a vacant search of the eyes, and named to him a person for whom the fictitious name was a blind, the new boy would have been well off and well on his way. But now he knew that he had been designedly and unquestionably hoodwinked, sent out after a feather in the wind.

He was about to return up the stairs, as had others before him with the selfsame paper, take his kidding, and thereafter admit that he had been handed something. But Carney was Irish. The Irish are credited with a considerable sense of humor. A sense of humor has two manifestations: one is to laugh at a joke and the other is to make jokes for others to laugh at. Chili was in no laughing humor.

He slid the John Doe warrant into his

Black Tony's Horn

by May Wynne

Before the Death of Any Bessington the Sound of the Horn Is Heard.

"GHOSTS? Of course I believe in ghosts," laughed Diana gayly. "But you don't really mean that there is a real live ghost here, do you?"

"Not exactly here," replied Hugh Bessington, smiling back into her hazel eyes, "but we sport a family ghost, of course; have you never heard of it?"

"Never, but do tell me, it is just the time and the place for a ghost, isn't it?"

Her companion leaned back in his chair, surveying the picture—or as much of it as was visible in the winter twilight.

They were seated in a corner of the great oak paneled hall which had been the pride of many generations of the Virginia Bessingtons of Bessington manor. Trophies of the chase and old portraits adorned the walls, but Hugh was not looking at them, but at the girl seated in the wide, big, carved chair opposite, the ruddy flames of the log fire lighting up her pretty, piquant face with its clustering curls and soft hazel eyes. How his heart beat as he watched her sitting there, with one tiny foot stretched out half resting on the back of the great deerhound who lay enjoying the warmth of the crackling fire. He was longing to take her in his arms and tell her he loved her, and instead she demanded this idiotic ghost story.

"There's not much to tell," he said with a forced laugh. "It concerns a wild Bessington who lived in revolutionary days, who earned the sobriquet of 'Black Tony.' He seems to have been a pretty reckless, devil-may-care sort of fellow, whose only enduring passion was hunting. He owned a mare which was the envy of the countryside, and he always boasted that she would never refuse any leap he chose to put her to. Just near the quarries there is a fence—nothing very formidable—with a deep pit the other side and a wood beyond it and on the left; you know the place?"

"Yes, yes, quite well; Anthony pointed it out to me the other day when we were hunting; there is a gate just to the right."

"That's the place. Well, Black Tony swore he would leap the fence, pit and all, and sound his horn at the same time.

"The mare—Queen Bess—rose to the task with all the determination of a lady with her reputation at stake, but the sound of the horn so startled her that she swerved, and both she and her rider were dashed to pieces at the bottom of the pit—which was some old, disused quarry, and a great depth."

"Poor Black Tony."

"Probably deserved what he got from all accounts, but he has had his revenge on future generations, for, immediately before the death of any Bessington of Bessington manor the sound of his horn is heard, as it was that fatal day when death found him in the old quarry."

"How horrible—have you ever heard it?"

"No—I believe it is most audible to the doomed man."

"But is it different to any other horn?"

Hugh Bessington rose.

"Here is the original," he replied, taking down an old fashioned silver horn from the wall. "Yes, it has a curiously sweet note. Shall I show you?"

"No, no. I—don't want to talk of it any more. I hate ghosts; let's talk of something else."

Her companion was standing nearer to her now, the twilight hour, the nervous fear in the childish face, the intoxication of her near presence inspired him with a sudden courage mingled with mad desire.

But as the girl understood the purport of the words which he stammered forth so incoherently her pretty face flushed crimson with surprised embarrassment.

"O, please," she cried. "You mustn't, no, indeed, you mustn't."

"But I love you; you must have known it, and you were not angry, Diana—my dearest—"

But she had risen, too, rosy red with shy confusion.

"I must explain," she faltered. "Although he asked me to tell no one till his mother knew—I am engaged to your brother—to Anthony."

He repeated her words dully, not grasping the meaning.

"To Anthony?"

"Yes, to Anthony—only this afternoon, and when we came in your mother was out driving and he said she must be the first—but, but——"

"What! all in the dark," cried a strong, masculine voice from the staircase. "Is that you, Diana? Come here, sweetheart, the mater wants to see you."

She had sprung forward eagerly at the sound of his voice, glad to escape from the difficult situation; something in her future brother-in-law's face had made her afraid, but the feeling passed as she felt her lover's strong arm round her slender waist, and looked up with a joyous little thrill into the bronzed, handsome face with its tender gray eyes.

"What were you talking to Hugh about, little one?" he said, half jealously, when they were out of earshot. "You both seemed——"

"It was your family ghost story," she interrupted lightly. "Do you know I could not help feeling sorry for Black Tony, he sounded such a man, but I call it spiteful of him to haunt his descendants like that; they couldn't help him being killed."

Bessington laughed.

"He has never troubled me," he said.

A glorious December morning—from a huntsman's point of view—and a prettier sight it would have been hard to find than the one gathered about the great front door of Bessington manor. The sun shone down brightly on pink coats and gay faces, for this was one of the most popular meets of the season, as Anthony Bessington was the most popular master.

How handsome and sportsman-like he looked, thought Diana, with a glad thrill of love and pride, as he stood on the steps speaking to several friends who had dismounted, holding their horses by their bridles.

Rosy with blushes she stood beside him, receiving their congratulations with a pretty shyness, for she was scarcely 18, and had not acquired the sang froid of a twentieth century demoiselle.

"And how is it that you are not hunting today, Miss Gaythorne?" asked the courtly old Robert Albury. "I think I have seen you in the field before."

"O, yes," she replied. "I love it, but I had such a bad headache that I thought I would rest today—I want to get it quite well by this evening—it is the hunt ball, you know."

He paid her a graceful compliment upon the certainty of being able to name her as the belle of the evening, and hastily mounted as the huntsman's horn sounded near.

"Good-by, sweetheart," was Antheny's farewell. "By the bye, where's Hugh?"

"I saw him a moment ago," she replied. "He is riding Croisette, and I think she was rather fresh. I expect he was afraid of upsetting some of the other horses."

He waved his hand with a smile and the next moment was gone, while Diana stood, shading her eyes to see the last of the gay company, and listening to the echo of the horses' hoofs and the merry jingle of bridles.

"There is nothing like hunting—nothing," she sighed. "I almost wish I had gone, but my head was so bad this morning—I think it must have been those horrid dreams. I wish Hugh had not told me the family ghost tale."

It was certainly Diana's regret nearly all the morning, and her headache seemed to grow worse, combined as it was with a vague and unreasonable nervous depression. She could think of nothing but Hugh, and Black Tony's fateful horn.

"A little walk would do you good, my dear," said old Mrs. Bessington, beaming kindly upon her. It was such a joy to think that Anthony was marrying this charming girl instead of any of the "smart" women who seemed so alluring to the "F. F. V.s" in the present day.

"I think I will," Diana replied, "or I shall not be able to go tonight, and I should be so disappointed."

Mrs. Bessington's prescription proved effective, but somehow Diana felt her footsteps drawn towards the quarries. She wanted to go and see for herself where that bygone squire of Bessington manor had met his death.

"They will soon be home now," she said to herself, as she paused in the shadow of the little wood—such a dreary winter wood, with no murmur of voices save the rustling of dead leaves in the breeze.

"Yes," she comforted herself, as a spasm of fear shook her. "The hunt must soon be over—and he is sure to ride home this way, and we can go together by the bridle path." A happy smile dimpled her cheek at the thought.

"Poor Hugh," she whispered involuntarily. "Poor Hugh—I must always be very kind to him. I do hope it was not my fault, but I never thought—of him."

She little knew that Hugh was close to her though he had not seen her. Yet he was thinking of her, too, as he crouched there, on the other side of the hedge, with a curious, old fashioned horn gripped in his hand.

"She would love me if it were not for Anthony," the devil within was tempting him with. "She will love me—when she has forgotten Anthony."

His pulses throbbed tempestuously, as he recalled the vision of a girl's face looking up at him from the framing of a carved oak chair. How he had longed to hold her in his arms, tightly, tightly—and she belonged to Anthony—yes, to Anthony, just as surely as one day she would belong to him. Once again he gripped the silver horn. So, unseen by each other, those two waited for the man who came riding blithely across the fields towards them.

There was a smile on Anthony Bessington's face as he rode, the smile of a man who goes home to pleasure rather than of the one who rides away from it, yet, although he was a keen sportsman, and the run had been a record one that day, he knew that the best part would be awaiting him in the twilit hall of his ancestors.

"Hard luck for Hugh, Croisette falling lame so early in the day," he thought. "He looked sulky enough over it, too, poor chap. I wonder what Di has been doing with herself; it's a good thing she did not come, it has been a hard day."

He was now close to the fence—he had not seen Diana standing in the wood on his left.

"Steady, old woman," he said, patting his mare's neck, and set her at the fence to the right of Black Tony's fatal quarry. Clear and sweet rang out the notes of a horn as the mare gathered herself together for the leap. And, at the sound, even Anthony Bessington grew pale, so silvery, so insistent, so unmistakable was the sound. The reins fell upon Beauty's neck even as the frightened animal swerved in sudden fear at the unexpected noise in such close proximity, and the next moment, with a scream of terror, the poor creature had slipped on the edge of the quarry and was hurled to destruction beneath.

A man's figure rose up hurriedly from behind the fence.

Only one saw his face as he ran, still clutching the horn, his knees trembling beneath him in a sudden, remorseful agony. But, as Diana looked into his face her heart grew sick with horror. She understood.

He did not see her as he fled, striving as he went to realize all that he had accomplished, to assure himself that he had succeeded beyond his most glowing expectations. His rival lay huddled and lifeless at the bottom of Black Tony's quarry, and he, as the master of Bessington Manor, would woo and win his brother's love. Yes, it was good, altogether good, that sudden inspiration of mushroom growth—yet why did he shudder as he came in sight of the old gray manor? It seemed to him that the echo of that horn still rang clear and sweet in his ears.

And meantime he little dreamed that where he had thought to leave only death, love lingered, too.

White to the lips, yet with every fiber of her being alive to the necessity of courage, Diana Gaythorne knelt over the abyss and back into her face looked the eyes of Anthony Bessington as he hung, gripping to a ledge, some few feet below her. She noticed every detail with the strained vision of a moment's glance. The knotted veins of his strong hands, the perspiration on his forehead, the brave smile in the gray eyes, the set determination of his mouth, and, above all, the slight loosening of the ledge of rock to which he held.

"If I can fetch help," she muttered thickly.

"It will be too late," he whispered back, very tenderly. "No, little sweetheart, it is good-by—good-by—did you not hear my home call?"

Her eyes blazed. "It was no ghost who sounded that horn," she replied. "I . . . I saw him go."

If he understood he gave no sign, but a faint color returned to his cheeks.

"Still, the call came," he said, "and it is still good-by—darling—darling——"

Through the gloom his eyes looked lovingly up into hers.

But she had risen, a desperate woman, with all of life trembling below her on the brink of destruction.

With hurried, nervous fingers she was unwinding the long, thick muffler she wore round her throat.

"A few minutes," she prayed. "Only a few minutes."

She had knotted the ends of her impromptu rope to the trunk of a strong sapling which grew near. Gracious heavens! if it might only reach."

In agony she leaned over again.

"Can you?" she whispered, and told him her plan.

He smiled, though there was little hope in his face. Would the rock hold firm while he raised his other arm to seize the dangling muffler above him?

A breathless moment, and then—

"Ah!" gasped Diana as she saw him catch the impromptu rope in a strong grip even as the ledge of stone gave way, falling with dull, resounding thuds far below.

Even now fate trembled in the balance.

Backward and forward swung the desperate man, slowly ascending, hand over hand, while the muffler grew even more frayed and strained as he neared the top.

The sound of many waters was in Diana's ears, a mist swam before her eyes, as she lay stretching out her arms to clasp the man swaying there in the evening gloom.

She was clutching, dragging with all the strength of her young muscles, and then, then—a sound of something snapping, a mighty spring forward, and Anthony lay upon the grassy edge of the quarry with Diana fainting in his arms.

* * *

It was almost dark when they reached the manor, to find everything in confusion. Vague rumors of misfortune were current upon the air, grooms and stable men were already scouring the country in search of their missing master. Mrs. Bessington, white and fearful, stood leaning upon Hugh's arm. He was whiter than she—but when he saw them enter the whiteness fled, leaving a gray lividness behind.

"Anthony, my dear Anthony," sobbed Mrs. Bessington, "the terror we have been in, and that foolish Simmons declared he heard the horn—Black Tony's horn." She was clinging to him as she spoke, and when they looked around again Hugh was gone.

* * *

The good people of Bessington still have it that Black Tony's horn was truly heard on that December evening, but Anthony Bessington laughs as he draws his fair young wife to his side saying that love is ever stronger than curses—or ghosts, too, for that matter. As for the true story, no one ever knew of it, saving the three actors, although folk wonder why the younger Bessington went abroad so suddenly to the Philippines, and why young Mrs. Bessington is so loath to speak of him.

But no one will ever know the truth—or why even Mr. Bessington looks grim when a chance mention is made of Black Tony's leap.

The Leopard and His Spots

by Emily Calvin Blake

One Woman Who Did Not Change Her Mind.

IT has always been my way to treat kindly those of a lower class than my own. From my earliest youth I've given my clothes to the poor, worked on charity ball committees, and helped at the settlement house. A year ago I selected half a dozen pleasant faced girls living in the lower part of town and invited them to come to my home every Tuesday evening to listen to my little travel talks. At the conclusion of these evenings Mabel, my maid, serves hot chocolate and little iced cakes. And then the girls go home, inspired by what I have told them of my journeyings through England and France.

One Tuesday night as the class was leaving I called Susan Callahan to me.

"Susan," I began at once, "you're a very pretty girl."

"So I've been told," she answered in her flippant manner.

"Is your dress sufficiently subdued?"

"For what?" she asked, looking down at her gaudy blouse with its startling V-neck.

"For a girl in your position?"

"Say, are we in America or Europe?"

"Susan, it is for your own good I speak. There is no one in your circle, I dare say, who understands how to talk to you, and a girl in your walk of life has to be very careful." I waited a moment. "Didn't I see you one night as I left the settlement house standing very close to a young man?"

She looked at me for a full moment with the vacuous stare the girls usually give me when I try to uplift their morals. Then she reddened a bit and flung her head high. "You might have if you were watching," she said.

Naturally I ignored her innuendo; one must have patience. "Susan," I went on, "your young man's a plumber, I understand, and a person of that sort——"

"I'll thank you not to call him a person," she flared out. "A plumber's as good as a king any day, let me tell you!" And with that she turned and fairly ran out of the room. The other girls, with more respectful mien, followed her. I went downstairs with them and said good night. Susan alone did not answer me.

As I passed the library door my brother Harvey called me. I went in. He was standing near the mantel, my father's old lawyer, Edwin McAvoy, beside him. There was something ominous in the air. The tidings I received were brief and startling. The entire fortune left us by our parents was gone.

Mr. McAvoy spoke with feeling. His elderly, finely wrinkled face was eloquent with sympathy. "You will have $50 a month," he said. "Am I not right?" with a glance at my brother.

"I think we can manage that amount," Harvey returned, wetting his lips.

"How can I possibly live on $50 a month?" I cried. "Why, I pay Mabel sixty a month."

"Perhaps you can learn to do your own hair, dress yourself," said Harvey dryly. "At 22 one is still pliable."

I turned to Mr. McAvoy. "Where did the money go?" I asked.

"Swept away; bad business conditions. Many factors you wouldn't understand entered into the affair."

"What shall I do?" I cried. My world had tumbled about me all in a twinkling. "Where shall I live?"

"Meta has promised to marry me at once," said Harvey, and the haggard look left his fact at mention of the girl he loved, but my heart sank. I'm not fond of Meta, for despite Harvey's illusions regarding her, she is too independent in a masculine sort of way for a delicately reared girl. I cannot say she is coarse, because her family stock is nearly as good as ours, but she is horribly frank and holds the peculiar idea that every woman should work for her living. And now to have to be in daily contact with her! I glanced around my father's library with its rich mahogany, rare fabrics, and yellow brasses. All to be left behind in rude, irreverent hands!

"Well, Harvey," I said at last, "I suppose Meta will have enough money in her own name to help matters. Since there is no other way, I might as well settle to the thought of living with you after your marriage."

He turned quickly to me; then: "Living with us! That's impossible. Why, do you know what Meta has promised to do?" He threw back his shoulders. "She's going out west with me, where I've the promise of a job. We're going to start at the bottom. She loves me that well!"

Incredulously I stared at him. "But what will become of me?" I cried again.

"You'll have the $50 a month," he returned. "And I suppose you'll have to earn something to add to that. Aren't there some practical courses offered at the settlement house?"

He left that question, without even waiting for my answer, to call on Meta. Since they were to be married within a month, they had many things to attend to.

Mr. McAvoy adjusted his tortoise shell glasses, smoothed the black silk ribbon to which they were attached. Though I knew he was greatly disturbed for my sake, still he looked as he had for as many years as my memory went back—a white haired gentleman of perfect manners, dignified bearing. He said now: "I know of a very excellent place where you can board for $8 a week; that is, if you think it best that you try to live on this $50 a month."

"What else is there for me to do?" My lips trembled.

He left the mantel, came close to me. "Ethel," he said, "I'm going away for the summer. Part of the time I shall be in San Francisco, part in Mexico City representing the interests of a client of mine."

I waited. It seemed an irrelevant answer to my question, but in a moment I understood. "Will you go with me to San Francisco?" he said. "I should like to take you away at once."

"Are you asking me to marry you, Mr. McAvoy?" I asked, and shuddered. He seemed very old in his neat, scholarly way. His hands, I saw, were wrinkled and small, like claws.

"I know there is a great discrepancy of years, but I could give you all you've been accustomed to having," he said. "I know you are exquisitely untouched from the world. I should like to preserve your beauty, your sweetness."

It was all very old fashioned and affecting, but his lips were thin and colorless, his eyes watered with his feeling. I shook my head.

"Is there any one else?" he asked. Yes, there had been—Geoffrey Lane, to whom with perversity my heart had turned with longing. It had been presumptuous of him to ask me to marry him. He was poor and unknown, a young clerk in my brother's office whom Harvey had taken up because he admired him, thought he had a future. So: "There is no one else," I said to Mr. McAvoy, and he brightened.

"Perhaps when I return?" he ventured.

"Don't make me say anything definite now!" I begged.

In less than a month I was settled in the place Mr. McAvoy had found for me, a large and sunny room on the second floor of Mrs. Graham's "select boarding house." My window looked out over a little park and I suppose might be considered comfortable. Mrs. Graham herself was conscientious and clean, but possessed the outrageous frankness of her class. When I asked if my breakfast might be served in my room she answered with disconcerting candor:

"Not for $8 a week, Miss Hibbard."

"Mr. McAvoy explained to you, did he not, that naturally I should require certain privileges?"

"You got a very special room because of Mr. McAvoy," she answered; "but I have to run this establishment with a certain number of helpers. I'd like to see Mary's face if I told her a perfectly well young woman wanted her breakfast in bed!"

"My servants never dared question my orders," I told her, and at that she stood looking at me for a time before speaking. Then: "Well, Miss Hibbard," she said in a softer voice, "in view of what you've still got to learn in this world I'll try to do my best for you. What special privileges would you like?"

"I want to entertain my travel class here on Tuesday evenings," I said, "and it has always been my custom to serve refreshments. Occasionally I should like flowers in my room. And I notice the number of towels allotted to me is very inadequate."

She stared at me again. "Well, you may have your class," she said; "but the other things will have to be extra. Shall I charge them to you?"

"Send the bill to my brother in Wyoming. I will give you his full address later."

This was as Harvey, departing on his honeymoon, had suggested to me. At the last he had relented from his indifferent attitude and told me that if the $50 a month did not cover all my needs just to let him know.

So the girls (excepting Susan) continued their visits to me on Tuesday evenings, and at 10 o'clock Mrs. Graham served coffee, sandwiches, and cake. The girls sometimes told me of their work and I advised them how best to spend their money. They seemed pitiably lacking in common sense, buying fancy shoes and flimsy silk stockings instead of the sensible clothing quite proper for girls in their station. One night I asked after Susan.

"Doesn't she enjoy the class any more?" I inquired.

"O, she's busy with her friend," some one answered.

So my words had fallen on stony ground. I determined to look after Susan.

I waited for a few weeks, and as the girl still remained away from my Tuesday class, I went to the department store where she worked. It was one of the cheaper stores that I had never before entered. Susan was in the basement notion department, and although it was early summer and a lovely breeze blowing, the place was stuffy with unbearable odors.

I began at once: "Susan, you haven't been to my class since I moved from my old home."

"O," she answered, "I don't care to hear that I can't behave myself because I live west of the boulevard."

"Well, but Susan, isn't there something in that?" I asked gently. "You haven't had the benefits of the girls who live in the boulevard homes. Certainly you haven't been shielded as they have."

"And for that reason," she snapped, "I know temptation when I meet it and how to handle it. Now, since the floorman's got his eye on me, I'll have to ask you to leave."

I returned home discouraged. It is not pleasant to do your best for ordinary persons with little sensitiveness and be flaunted. I longed at this moment for my old life, old friends, old associations. But I was alone. My brother, despite his kindness at the last, seemed estranged. Dear Mr. McAvoy was in San Francisco, according to his last letter to me.

But my greatest anxiety was the discovery that I could not live on my pitiably small income. After deducting my board money I had very little left. A concert or two, a luncheon in town, new gloves, left me depleted. If I had had to pay for the weekly refreshments for the girls or the flowers and other extra privileges, as Mrs. Graham termed bare necessities, I should truly have been down to rock bottom.

Thoroughly dispirited, I sat down in my room and looked out over the little park. Mr. McAvoy's offer recurred to me, but I rejected it. Suddenly the thought of Geoffrey Lane came to me. I had been reading of him only a little while before. Harvey's faith in him had been justified. He had worked out some patent or other, for the right to use which a great company had paid him a fortune. It occurred to me now that it would be merely courteous to write him a letter of congratulation. After all, a man has a right to ask a girl to marry him; I was perhaps a little hasty in refusing him so peremptorily, and as I remembered his strong young face, his steady eyes, my heart missed a beat.

Despite my anxieties I sat down at once and wrote him a note, saying that I had always believed in him and was very glad of his good fortune. I suggested that he call on me and talk over old times. I directed the letter to his place of business so there might be no delay in his receiving it.

The next morning a letter came to me from Meta, my sister-in-law. She wrote that she was sending the letter without Harvey's knowledge; that she had hesitated a long time before writing at all; that a child was coming in the fall and the thought of its needs had given her courage.

She told me that the $50 a month came out of Harvey's salary, a very small one at that. Harvey had felt that he could not leave me helpless, so he had told the fable of the income. Meta had been glad to have him do this, hoping that I would take part of the money and get a profession so in time I would be self-supporting.

But instead of this, she said, I had settled down in the path of least resistance, probably preaching to some of the settlement girls on the way to live, and on top of the monthly sum she and Harvey could so illy spare they had been receiving bills from Mrs. Graham for flowers, extra towels, extra service.

She said further that she meant to tell Harvey she had sent this letter, and she concluded with the remark that she hadn't the compunction she might have had in telling me certain truths had I not been young and strong and in full possession of all my faculties. . . .

Pride choked me. I knew exactly how much money I had at the moment, $15. Of this sum I sent ten to Meta and told her that she might stop the little income at once. I was doubly glad I had written to Geoffrey. I knew now how much encouragement from a friend can mean when you've been friendless, as I felt myself to be; as I knew Geoffrey had been when he was working to get a foothold.

But a fortnight passed before his answer came. I tore open the envelope with trembling fingers. After all, social position is not everything, and a member of my family would be received in any circle. I read the letter and stood for a long time staring at it. It went:

"My dear Miss Hibbard: It is quite like you to take time to write your congratulations on my very good fortune in placing my patent so miraculously well. I naturally thought you had forgotten me. I should moteness to this heedless onrush of the present. She did not think of Katherine's feelings as being in the least like her feelings of thirty years ago.

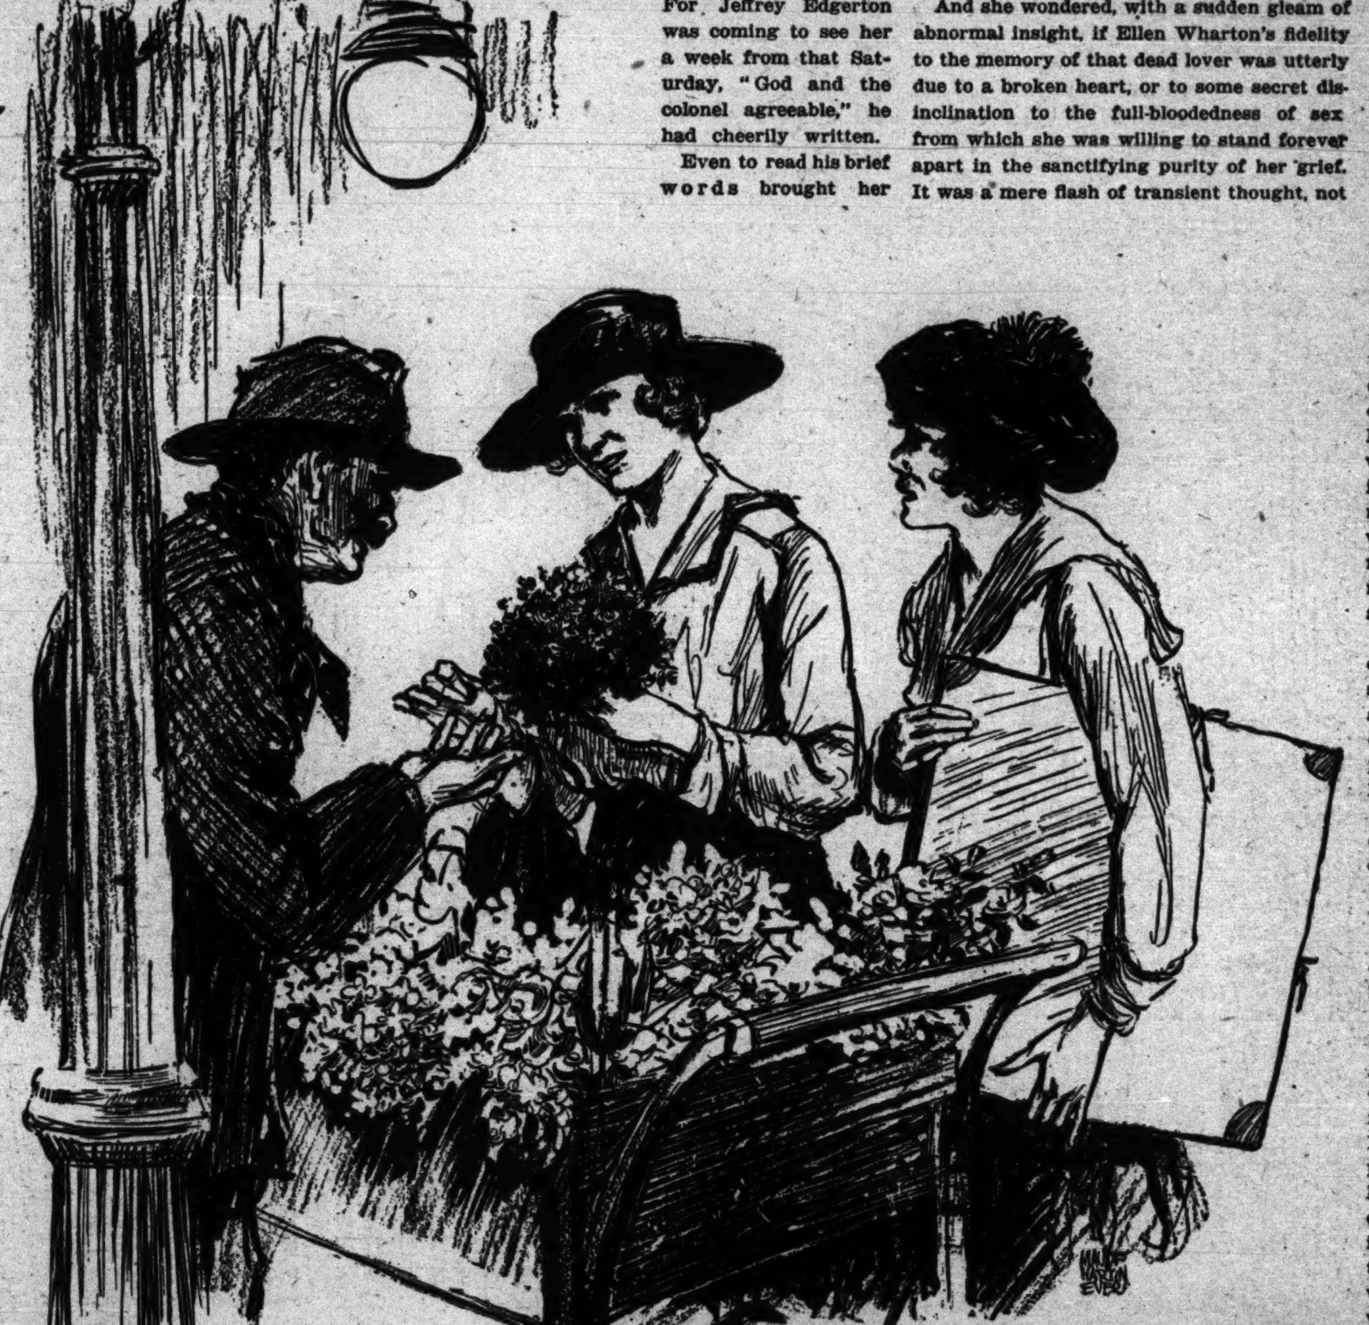
It was Miss Anne who made answer to Katherine's impatient question. "First feelings may be quite true to the moment," she said mildly, "but they are not always true to second feelings—are they? I am only afraid that you are apt to be a little impulsive at times, Katherine—and then have to undo it later."

She caught at Miss Anne's last phrase.



"Always the flowers," jeered Olga Goulebeff beside her. She was a short, plump girl, orphan daughter of a Russian father and a French mother, whose easel was next to Katherine King's in the morning classes.

"Undo it? What do you mean, Miss Anne?"

"Well—you didn't quite know your own mind about Richard Conrad, did you?"

"He didn't always know his about me. He found out first, that was all. But—but this is quite different, please!" The self-conscious color was deepening in her cheeks, but she spoke with an assumption of airy ease. "Because he sends me a picture, Capt. Edgerton isn't in the least a devoted suitor."

"Englishmen take these things more seriously than our men, my dear. For him to write you and to send you his photograph argues that he is taking a real interest——"

"And to accept the picture is leading him on?" Katherine laughed with increasing constraint.

"Either that—or you are permitting him a flirtation," Miss Ellen answered unexpectedly as Miss Anne hesitated. "His inclination may be going a little faster than his head will follow."

It was a startling and an unpalatable thought. Katherine betrayed her naive astonishment in a soft stare, and then she threw out a little ripple of derision.

"Am I so very ineligible, Miss Ellen? Don't Englishmen like young ladies who paint—canvases?"

"An Englishman of position thinks of more than his inclination," pronounced Miss Ellen. "I think that water has boiled enough, Katherine."

"I beg your pardon. Well—I promise not to break my heart over him, then. Nor to let him break his over me. I guarantee it a thoroughly coöperative friendship of great mutual uplift and enlightenment," Katherine ran on at random, hurrying to pour out the tea. "But now do tell me about Versailles. I was so sorry I couldn't have had that experience with you."

And she thought, as she listened to their accounts of the previous day's trip, that it was a fortunate thing that they were not clairvoyant to the letter lying in the portfolio upon her table. For Jeffrey Edgerton was coming to see her a week from that Saturday, "God and the colonel agreeable," he had cheerily written.

Even to read his brief words brought her a vivid sense of him, tall and straight and merry, a vivid feeling of his personality. That feeling had been very strong those first days in Paris. The journey from Boulogne had been an outer blank, beneath which she had given herself over to dreams and revery. And at first even Paris, particolored, kaleidoscopic Paris, had beat upon the surface of her senses in vain. She had lent it no more than a veiling attention.

Yet swiftly that dreaminess had worn away. The continued impact of the novel sights, and the quick plunge into the work for which she had come, had set up their reactions. Edgerton seemed something remote and apart from her present life, and though his letters, arriving regularly each week, revivified the keen sense of his personality, they did not bring him into relation with her everyday existence.

She was perfectly content with this. Life was going on splendidly. It was enough to have his friendship for her speaking in the interchange of letters without its reappearance in her daily actual experience. From that reappearance she secretly shrank, partly from an unacknowledged feeling that it was putting life to the question too soon, and the announcement of his intention to come was causing her many a flutter.

There would be something significant in that meeting—or something flatly disenchanting.

"You won't like me a bit when you see me again," she had written him promptly. "My fingers are always painty—and I'm so fearfully impressed by your taking time to come that I shall be dumb with awe."

"I'll risk it," he had scrawled back, and, underscored, "Especially the dumbness!"

The consciousness of this intimate exchange kept Katherine a little flushed and defensive during the remainder of the visit. She had meant to refer, frankly in appearance but with misleading casualness, to the prospects of Capt. Edgerton's being in Paris, but now she closed her lips upon it.

And she wondered, with a sudden gleam of abnormal insight, if Ellen Wharton's fidelity to the memory of that dead lover was utterly due to a broken heart, or to some secret disinclination to the full-bloodedness of sex from which she was willing to stand forever apart in the sanctifying purity of her grief. It was a mere flash of transient thought, not wholly just to the woman before her, but it held its element of truth.

Katherine felt suddenly tender toward Miss Anne. And she wished that she would meet some thoroughly nice man, fall tumultuously in love with him, and marry him at the consul's in post haste.

It was a pity these revelations didn't occur. But the matrimonial times had been out of joint for gentle, careful Miss Anne. How pale life would be if it were done with splendid hope! Pity the heart that never risked its argosies of adventure.

. . . .

In showing out her guests downstairs and lingering over their last farewells she blocked the way of the man who came plunging out his first floor door. She stood aside to let him pass and he made a reluctant motion toward the slouch hat tugged down over his black-browed eyes, but he did not send a glance in her direction.

And Katherine, able wholly to laugh now over the encounter of the afternoon, pointed them gayly to his big, retreating back.

"He bites," she said mysteriously, and she christened him to herself for all time: "My neighbor—the Surly Man!"

. . . .

Her Paris days were settling into more and more sharply defined ways. At the College club she had met several pleasant American girls, but, as most of them happened to be studying music, the difference in interest drew them steadily apart. There was an English girl she liked studying art at Julien's and she saw something of her, but not much, for most of her time was given to her own académie and the friends that she made there.

Two middle aged American ladies she liked immensely; good, energetic souls who, after an arid youth of teaching drawing, were at last realizing something of their long deferred ambitions. Fortunately they had not yet realized how fatally deferred those poor ambitions had been. With them Katherine often went to Henriette's, that little restaurant about which cluster so many traditions of frolicsome student life, and with them she shared the sly amusement provoked by intruding American tourists, lured by these old tales of high jinks, and woefully taken aback upon beholding many groups of compatriots, mild, feminine, sedate, with their sprinkling of gray hairs.

There were other nights, however, when Henriette's was not so decorous. Then it was the Americans, the younger Americans, more than the French students, who upheld the riotous tradition, but the most sympathetic eye could not find in the babel of laughter and corks the romantic gayety of the Mimis and the Rudolphs of the past.

These were the days when Katherine's work absorbed her, when she lived from day to day in an enthusiasm and ennobling delight that was like a spiritual flame in her. Her passionate preoccupation would have worn down a youth less buoyant and healthily gifted. She painted at the académie every morning and often afternoons; but her habit was to work in her own studio in the afternoons, at experiments of her own devising, returning to the académie for the croquis at 4.

At first she had been shy of herself and distrustful of her ability among these strangers, but her gift was genuine and asserted its power. And she had been splendidly trained with nothing to unlearn. She painted, Guerin finally told her, like a man. Her effect was simple and bold and strong.

"It is a pity you are not a man," Guerin observed, studying one of her half finished canvases.

Her eyes steadily, a little too defiantly, interrogated him.

"O, yes, you understand," he answered dryly. "You see now how you work—you know that you are painting against time."

That held its barb of truth for her. She realized indeed that if ever her work was to justify itself, was to be of paramount concern in the ordering of her life, it must take its place of honor as soon as possible. Etienne, her fellow student, had scant sympathy with work when it conflicted with his suggestions for an outing, and the way of the world outside that studio was to take it as the pleasant time serving of talent, and to assume that what life had only to deal with was a gray eyed girl with a fresh and wholesome color and a healthy appetite for experience!

She knew, for instance, that Jeffrey Edgerton no more thought of her painting as a thing to be seriously reckoned with in his attraction for her than he thought of her embroidery. Probably he had not even attempted to analyze his impression upon the subject but if he had it would have been undoubtedly that she sketched very cleverly and would make some pretty things to hang on the walls. As for serious work—probably he thought that there she painted badly, very badly indeed, but Katherine felt intuitively that his loyalty would always stanchly insist that the things were "very jolly."

He had not made that trip to Paris upon the expected Saturday. Neither God nor the colonel had been favorably enough inclined, it appeared by the disposition of events, for an absurd epidemic of measles had broken out in his quarters and he was quarantined.

It was the telegram apprising her of this that brought the first sign of humanity from the Surly Man.

In the two weeks that had intervened since her ill-advised utterance of neighborliness she had seemed to run upon that man on almost every occasion—and without the least softening of their edged aloofness to each other. In general they appeared not to see each other. When this desirable abstraction could not be maintained—for instance, when dashing violently against each other in a bundle laden rush out a delicatessen door—his awareness of her personality—and reception of her apologies, for she had been the principal dasher, with some fatal damage to an eggy bundle of his, she surmised—had been accomplished with a maximum of ill grace.

The SPLENDID CHANCE

SYNOPSIS.

Katherine wanted to paint well more than anything in the world, so she said good-by to America and Dick Conrad without a pang, offering a cool, sisterly cheek for his salutation just before the boat slid away from the dock. She resented hotly the quizzical air of a young Englishman who happened on their leavetaking. One day at sea a caricature she had made of him fluttered across the deck and he caught it. In the days that followed they were together a great deal, and just before she left the boat at Boulogne he asked if he might come to see her in Paris.

Katherine King, a young American art student, was busily chasing a career in Paris when the war broke out. The future was brilliant with promise, for she had love, friends and exceptional talents. How the mighty struggle changed her entire viewpoint, how she learned to reject petty things of life is told in this amazingly vivid tale of war ridden France.

SECOND INSTALLMENT.

IMPRESSIONS OF PARIS.

A LITTLE after noon the doors of the Academie Moderne closed behind her and she came out into the sunshine of the Rue de Notre Dame des Champs. It was April, sweet, warm, and bright, with not a cloud from the morning's rain to dim the blueness of the sky. The tender breath of spring came stealing to her in the fragrance of violets from a curb vender's cart, and she stopped impulsively for a damp cluster of the purple flowers.

"Always the flowers," jeered Olga Goulebeff beside her. She was a short, plump girl, orphan daughter of a Russian father and a French mother, whose easel was next to Katherine King's in the morning classes. She had merry eyes, an impudent nose, a small, droll mouth, and black, curly hair that grew low over her forehead and ears. At first glance she seemed a pleasant, rather childlike creature; it was not till you looked close that you glimpsed something fixed, secretive, inscrutable about these small features.

Katherine smiled vaguely in response. Her eyes were absently following the purple and gold masses of the flower cart as it bumped its way through the crowded street; in her ears Olga's voice and the competitive cries of the venders were caught up and blent in the chimes that near them rang the quarter hour. She loved all the tones in that unquiet voice of Paris, all the colors in the bright and shifting spectacle. Everywhere she saw pictures.

Leaving Olga at the restaurant she started for the studio which had become home to her now, passing down the Rue de Varin for that detour through the Luxembourg gardens which was a constant joy to her beauty loving spirit. Here April was at her fairest and sweetest; the trees and shrubs were in delicate leaf; the grass held that first tender green of spring; the borders shone with golden hearted daffodils. From the green shrubberies white statues gleamed and in the sunshine the drops of the fountain sparkled in rainbow hues.

Everywhere against the bloom and color of the park were bonnes and babies and a troop of little children; huge, bright hoops went flying down the paths with active little bare legs racing after; balloons were bobbing and floating at mimic heights like a sudden high growth of giant flowers, and here and there delicious little girls in miniature skirts and droll little boys in very tight and short trousers above their thin legs were tossing balls or playing at diabolo.

The girl's lips curved in unconscious smiles at the youngsters and she shared her violets with one toddler that swayed perilously about her skirts, then, remembering the flying minutes, she hurried on out of the park and through the crooked streets to that gray stoned old corner where she lived.

She entered a worn doorway over which a battered coat of arms still bore its lilies, passed the door of the corner studio which was beneath her own and turned to the stairs. On the lowest step she found a small child sitting, who shrank patiently into the corner to let her pass. A round shade hat and a mop of untidy black curls half hid the little face, but from the shadows a pair of big, black eyes met Katherine's interrogative smile without a flicker of answering brightness.

"Do you want to see any one?" said Katherine in French, for Madame Bonnet, the concièrge, was not at present in her cage, and the mite looked forlorn there on her shadowy step.

The child continued to stare darkly at Katherine before replying. "I am waiting for some one," she answered briefly in French, with a small air of dignified reserve.

"O! I see," Katherine murmured, and being taken by those solemn eyes she lingered, extending another cluster of violets from that depleted bunch. "But it is too fine a day to be waiting, isn't it? You ought to be out picking these."

Rather slowly the little thing's fingers closed about the flowers. "I thank you," she said primly, accepting the necessity for so doing, apparently, as part of her lot.

A stolidly reserved mite, Katherine reflected humorously, abandoning her attempts at friendliness and starting on, when a sudden joyous shout made her look back. "Robert!" cried the little girl with a vigorous American sounding of the "t," and running from her lower step she cast herself jubilantly upon a young man just entering the door.

Katherine stared involuntarily; the young man, a stalwart, black browed fellow, was just fitting his key into the door of the first floor studio. Katherine remembered that black browed young man. She had caught a glimpse of him once or twice in passing in or out; she had heard that he was Robert MacNare, a sculptor, an "arrived" sculptor, as Madame Bonnet had stated succinctly, but the impression which pervaded all others came from the day of her arrival, when, trailing up the stairs in the wake of Madame Bonnet's creaking stoutness, she had been startled by a stocky, blue bloused figure darting out to the bottom of the stairs and shaking an admonitory fist after madame.

"Pas de chanteuses!" he had barked ferociously, adding, "No singers, mind!" in unmistakable American for Katherine's benefit, and madame had turned smilingly and waved a pacific reassurance, "O, la, la, jamais, au grand jamais! Pas de chanteuses, monsieur, pas de chanteuses!"

The memory of that moment made Katherine's lips twitch in irrepressible humor, and finding herself thus caught in staring back and smiling she spoke out frankly to the young man whose neighbor she was. "I have been trying to make friends with the little girl—but she was rather shy of me."

The young man gave her a just perceptible glance and turned the key in his door. "She has the bad taste to be unsocial, mademoiselle," he rejoined curtly, stepping briskly into his studio, the mite of a child at his side.

His manner more than implied that he also was speaking for himself.

Katherine found herself alone—and very warm cheeked. "Surly!" she thought furiously, and then, "Why did I stop and speak to him anyway? It was a silly thing to do! But he might have been human. I suppose that little thing is his sister. She's American, then, for all her French air. I wonder if she lives there with him?"

Continuing to wonder at the relation between the odd pair she reached her own studio, directly above that of the black browed young man, and her vexation went streaming from her at the sunny pleasantness of the room.

It was a bright airy place, with windows to the west and north, and it offered the instant impression of having been taken by storm after years of primitive occupation and vanquished by feminine civilization. To be sure, the large easel by the north light and the litter of paints and sketch boxes on the window seat appeared much as it might always have done, but by the western window a couch was gayly cushioned in yellows and grays and a low table by it held books and photographs, a basket of sewing and a bowl of jonquils, while another table, bearing a fat lamp and more books and writing things, stood between wicker chairs before a cavernous fireplace.

In the center of the room hung an electric light, proud triumph of progress to madame's heart, and beyond a narrow door was a small retreat where the miracle of running water might be spasmodically observed.

As Katherine entered the studio Madame Bonnet creakingly descended the stairs from a trip to the lodgers overhead, two American ladies of middle age, and paused upon the threshold, having a few words to speak, it appeared, upon the subject of a blanchisseuse. Katherine's choice met with darkly hinted disapproval. Madame had her favorites and played them vigorously. She was a stout, substantial old lady, girdled with a medieval jingle of keys. Her wrinkled face was a map of shrewd experience, and if the small, bright eyes beneath the beetling brows proclaimed a trifle derisively that their owner was no man's fool, they also added that there were honest folk in the world and she knew when she was treating with them.

Madame Bonnet stood on her lodger's threshold, discoursing leisurely upon the blanchisseuses, and watched Kathérine, kneeling triumphantly over a prostrate screen cover, nailing the last edge of gray burlap in place.

Katherine liked Madame Bonnet and liked to listen to her expressive French. Moreover, she was not yet inured to the solitude of her much loved studio, and was not always proof against the insidious waves of loneliness and homesickness to which she never referred in her bright letters home. When she was at work in the académie she forgot everything, but in the outside hours there were many little chinks not yet filled, and the newness and foreignness of her life, so delightful in general, held occasional little aches of remoteness and disconnection.

She wished that her mother and father could see her studio. She transferred it minutely to them in her voluminous letters, with descriptions of the académie, of Guerin, the master, of Etienne, the genius, and Olga, her informant. Her letters reflected her serenity, her happy assurance, her sense of the miracle of life. On one thing alone were they silent.

Suddenly madame broke off. She listened, her head a-cock, and Katherine waited, her hammer in her hand. She hoped the Whartons would not arrive until her screen was finished and in place.

"Ah, the voice of the monsieur below!" said madame with impressiveness, and creaked hurriedly from the room, to lean over the rail. In the silence the voice of the monsieur from below was distinctly audible.

She turned to Katherine.

"He desires to know if mademoiselle is to continue for eternity?" she reported simply. "He is annoyed."

"Crack!" went Katherine's hammer upon the next nailhead.

"There is but a little more to do," she responded coldly. "However, that little is necessary."

Madame did not return to the hall with the communication. She appeared aware that the gentleman below had relieved himself with a question purely rhetorical. She merely shut the door behind her as if that diminished the sounds falling upon the floor.

"I have a right to make a screen," said the girl spunkily. "Or doesn't he let you rent rooms to people who make screens?"

"Of that he had said nothing," replied madame with fine simplicity. "To singers—no—nor young ladies who practice the piano. He is of a particularness, that man! But then, it is not necessary to take such lodgers. Here there are always artists, or ladies who study at the Sorbonne, like the Americans above, or young gentlemen at the Ecole des Mines, or——"

Afterwards Katherine was a trifle ashamed of the vigor of the blows that sent those last nails home. Undoubtedly she made the poor man's ceiling quake! And since he was a sculptor probably he was sensitive to vibrations.

But her remorse did not have time to mount. The screen was no sooner triumphantly in place than the Whartons appeared upon the threshold in Madame Bonnet's stead, their arms filled with generous last things for Katherine and her studio.

As they sat about the low tea table in the western sunshine, the steam rising from the tiny kettle and the air fragrant with crisp cakes hot from the pastry cook's, Katherine felt a keen sense of loss in their departure the next day. She would miss them. They were home friends, those two dear Americans; with them she had begun this miracle of a foreign year, and their going would cut a stanch tie.

Their interest in her work was genuine and a little anxious, and she found herself enthusiastically reassuring them that she had found the right place and the right master.

"It's the only place where they really teach you to paint!" she declared with the fervor of the disciple. "I'm seeing things I never saw before—and I'm doing things better already."

"But that other académie was very much praised," Miss Ellen demurred. "And Monsieur Simon is such a delightful gentleman——"

"Monsieur Simon is a delightful gentleman and Monsieur Maynard is a delightful gallery god, and they are both delightful painters!" exclaimed Katherine. "And they come in turn each week and never remember you unless you have been there three years—so Olga says. Now here Monsieur Guerin knows you. And he knows your work. Why, he asked me this morning," she proceeded triumphantly, "why I made the same mistake in a neck that I made in a pose three weeks ago!"

"Why did you?" said Miss Anne worriedly.

Katherine's lips twitched. "Because necks are the very Old Harry," she murmured pensively. "Now if it were only legs—I could do a centipede with assurance!"

Something in the two pained faces before her caused her to hurry violently from that topic. She suspected that they would ask her presently if the legs had stockings. And yet, she reflected, as she rambled on about her classes, they reveled in the old masters. The distaste was for masterpieces in the making.

It was Miss Anne who on her way from Katherine's easel paused at the writing table and discovered a frame picture there.

"Why, Katherine, this looks like——" The discovery leaped from her lips with involuntary surprise. Then determinedly she went on with it, feeling a certain responsibility.

"Is it—Captain Edgerton?"

"Yes. He has just had that taken," Katherine responded with a brightness almost too casual. "He sent it over this week."

A queer little silence fell.

Miss Anne stood looking down at the picture. She noticed that Katherine had it in a silver frame. And she thought, worriedly, that he was a very fine looking young man, indeed.

"You are writing then?" Miss Ellen's tones held a cool implication of wonder.

"Why, yes—and when I sent him some of the snaps that we had taken on shipboard he reciprocated with this photograph." Then Katherine hated herself for the weakness of the explanation. She took the picture from Miss Anne and extended it to Miss Ellen.

"He's rather conquering looking, isn't he?"

"He is a very soldierly young man." Miss Ellen held the picture a moment and then set it upon the tea table, where its straight, lifelike glance looked out directly upon the little group.

Katherine felt again that odd, subtle, hampering sense of their disapproval creeping over her. And why? Was it simply the precipitation of the friendship which made it distasteful to their notions of dignified progress? Did they think her too impulsive? Too—impressionable?

"Dear Miss Ellen," she said, "life can't always be a minuet. Sometimes it must waltz. Sometimes the tempo is accelerando."

Faintly Miss Ellen's fine lips smiled. "So it would seem, my dear. But I doubt the wisdom of so much haste."

"Are the only right impulses then the—laggard ones?" said the girl, resenting. "Is truth never in first feelings?"

Miss Ellen merely smiled again with that arching of her brows which was like a shrug, and Katherine was left with a sense of baffled defeat. She did not know that Miss Ellen was remembering a day of thirty years ago when a young man had brought her his photograph in the West Point uniform. They had not been lovers then, not avowed lovers. She remembered his little formal speech of presentation. And for twenty-nine years he had been lying in the churchyard.

The memory did not give her any sense of sympathetic kinship with this other girl and this other photograph. It brought her only the loneliness of detachment, the sense of re-have answered before, but you will forgive my delay when I tell you I have been very busy getting married. Again let me thank you for your kindness. Cordially yours,

"Geoffrey Lane."

Strangely, at the moment I remembered I had but $1 in my purse. I put Mr. Lane's letter away and went downstairs to seek Mrs. Graham.

"Mrs. Graham," I said, "it is imperative that I get a much cheaper room. Also, do you remember speaking of a job as a filing clerk I thought one of my settlement girls could hold?"

"Yes," she said.

"I'll take it if I can get it," I said.

Mrs. Graham gave me an attic room for $2 a week and the privilege of making my own breakfast. Also she wrote a letter to the firm desiring a filing clerk, and I presented it to a Miss Jones. She took me on, as Mrs. Graham was one who had once done her a great favor, she told me.

Miss Jones, I found, had a very impertinent manner of speaking. She did not change this way toward me, speaking quickly and rudely when she gave me an order. For days on end I walked miles with no slightest word of appreciation. However, the salary was $7 a week, and I had to live. But one day Miss Jones called me to her desk.

"Miss Hibbard," she commenced, "I've refrained from speaking to you before because you're new to the business game. However, I find it necessary to remind you that our hours are from 8 till 5:30."

"I'll admit I've been half an hour late two mornings," I returned coldly; "however, this was due to unavoidable circumstances." I did not see fit to explain to this woman that the unavoidable circumstances were chiefly Mary's failing to bring hot water to me in the attic.

"Well, you'll have to quit having unavoidable circumstances in your life," she said with a vicious smile. "You'll be here promptly or there'll be something doing."

"Miss Jones," I said, "it was my understanding that I was to have due respect shown to me."

"Well, we don't believe in respect in business unless it's merited," she said. "Be on time hereafter, I repeat, as a warning."

"Very well," I said; "you may keep your position."

I did not know how to go about finding another position, so for days I stayed in my attic room mending my clothes, which were beginning to show wear. Mrs. Graham asked me no questions, only once or twice she sent me a dish of ice cream, for which when I met her in the hall I duly thanked her. Summer was advancing, and it was growing insufferably hot in the attic.

As time went on I learned that hunger is just as unendurable in the heat of summer as in December, though I've never eaten much at best in warm weather. But when after a day of dry rolls and sips of water I ventured out into the street I felt very weak.

But I managed to survive, though I tramped for many weary miles trying to secure a position. I found that after all I had been fortunate in securing the place under Miss Jones, for wherever I went I was turned away as soon as I confessed to little experience.

One day I found myself near Susan's store. It was the noon hour, and the hot, glaring streets were crowded. I stopped to look in at a window, and some one spoke to me. It was Susan.

"Well, Susan!" I said.

"Don't pat me on the head that way," she cried in her old sharp manner, and went on: "My God, you're hungry; you're as white as a ghost, and thin! I've got an extra dime. Come on; I'll buy you a cup of coffee and a piece of pie."

In the little lunchroom, stimulated by the coffee, I asked her if there was a chance for a position in her store.

"You can always get a job in summer in the basement," she said. "Girls can't stand the heat; they're always giving out."

"I should like to try," I said.

"Could you stand the pace, I wonder?" she meditated.

"I suppose if I couldn't——" I began, but in her vehement way she interrupted: "See here, Miss Hibbard, she cried, "they don't make fish of one and flesh of another, no matter what your past glory. Work or get out, that's the Beehive's motto."

Which in truth I learned was the case after Susan had secured a berth for me in the basement remnant department. And the wages were only $6 a week for work that took daily toll of every ounce of my strength. I had nothing left after paying my expenses. Susan, with a perspicacity rare in one of her upbringing, seemed to guess the truth.

"Say," she said, "we've got a room off our kitchen you can have with board for three a week, and you can walk to work. Besides, if you fall sick you'll have some sort of a home to be sick in and a dandy mother to take care of you."

"That's very kind of you, Susan," I said.

It was a small and very close flat in a tenement house which Susan occupied with her mother and two small brothers. The little room they gave me was scrupulously clean, however, and Mrs. Callahan herself a very worthy woman.

But those frightful days in the store! I felt that every day must be my last. I should have tried one of the better stores, but I so feared meeting any of my old friends! But . . . . the common women fighting for bargains; the bark of the floorman, never letting the girls forget they must be saleswomen first and last. And the customers insisted upon opening each remnant to see whether the ticket told the truth as to the number of yards. No remonstrance served. The floorman, when there was a lull, came and in his rude way spoke to me about this practice.

"I know it's against the rule of the store, Mr. Munger," I retored, "but if you can prevent the women from opening the remnants you're very clever."

"You'll be sent upstairs if you get sassy," he said. And that was all. I was too weary to argue.

One morning the heat seemed to come like great blasts from a place under the world. "How does anybody stand it?" I asked Susan at noon.

"You can always stand a little bit more," she said, indifferently.

The girls were all white with fatigue; they worked all day as Susan told me and washed their clothes at night. Mrs. Callahan did this for me.

"That's why you didn't get a bigger travel class," Susan went on. "The girls like to know about beautiful things. Why, sometimes I could stand for an hour before a picture of a sunset, but the common things like eating and sleeping and working crowd you up too much."

A peculiar remark for a girl of her kind to make. I wonder should I ever return to my former way of living if I couldn't find some method of giving these girls the beauties they long for deep in their hearts. They love music and pictures, I find, just as I do. Yet there is nothing but misery all about me. The wilted girls, the poor babies suffocating, the overworked "little mothers" whose real mothers go out daily to work. At this moment, when my feet are swollen and aching, when my eyes burn in my head, I feel I am one of them, that we are all one in this world.

The unaccustomed thoughts made my head whirl. Where did they come from? They filled my mind all one afternoon, the afternoon I fainted. As soon as possible, however, I was back at my place, the floorman suggesting by direct message that my faint had been a pose. He has never liked me since I discovered to him my difference from himself.

That night, tired out and weary, I wondered what Mr. McAvoy was doing. On an impulse I wrote to him, telling him of my present work, painting realistic pictures of my daily life, showing him the little hot room I occupied in Susan's tenement house. I did not want to sadden him, I told him. One must be brave, so I finished with a humorous stroke that perhaps there was a reason why I, like any other worker, should go on to the end, and perhaps die in harness . . . these prosaic days there was no knight to rescue me. . . .

The night I sent the letter I told Susan I thought I'd see a physician. She was unsympathetically silent.

"My dear girl," I said, with a touch of indignation, "you people probably let illnesses go till you are beyond being helped. A most stupid thing to do."

Mrs. Callahan spoke quickly: "The doctors in this neighborhood, dearie, must have their money at each visit, and then there's the medicine. We don't always have the ready money."

Her familiarity annoyed me. "Will you direct me to a physician?" I asked Susan.

"Haven't you one of your own?" she asked, surlily.

"I couldn't let any of my former acquaintances know of my present mode of life," I answered.

So after supper we went to a neighborhood doctor. I paid him a dollar for a prescription and the advice to rest. He didn't tell me how to live while I was resting. The filling of the prescription cost another dollar.

"See here," she said, turning fiercely on me, "sometimes I think you're learning a little, then again I see you ain't. How do you think we'd pay a couple of dollars each time we had an ache or pain? If we're really sick, we go to the free dispensary."

At the moment her young man, the plumber, approached. I knew he was the plumber because Susan's face lit when he came near.

"Hello, Sue," he cried, jovially. "Who's your friend?"

Susan introduced us. On the occasion of his visits at Susan's home I always remained in my little room. Now I stood perfectly still. But he put out a great red hand. "Glad to meet you," he said.

"How do you do?" I returned. Of course, I ignored the hand and stood waiting for Susan that we might continue on our way. But she treated me to a black look. "I'm going for a walk with my friend," she said. "I guess you can find your way home."

I turned away filled with indignation. I had never been out alone in the terrible neighborhood at night, and when I reached Mrs. Callahan's my heart was palpitating with fear. I ran up the narrow stairs, intending to go at once to my room. But a crowd of women and children were in the kitchen. On the floor Mrs. Callahan's younger son, Dennis lay. He had been knocked down by a delivery truck.

As I entered two women gently placing the weeping mother aside, picked the lad up, and carried him away to his bed. "He's only bruised," said one, and went quite intelligently about caring for the boy.

In an hour the house was cleared, the boy sleeping, and Mrs. Callahan came to my room. She had a little vanilla flavored custard for me. She was very white with unusual black rings under her eyes.

"You've had a bad day, Miss Hibbard," she said. "I thought this little custard might hearten you up."

"I'm very tired," I said, tasting the custard. "It's too bad Dennis was so careless."

"He wasn't careless," she said, quickly. "He does errands at night to help out, and he has to go quickly to keep his job."

"O," I said, and she went on: "Dennis is my own little lad. The light would have gone out for me the night had he died."

"You see," she continued, after a time, "I'm aiming to educate him proper; next fall he goes to school again. He's got a great mind."

I looked my astonishment. The boy was so extremely ordinary, with freckles and red hair. But I merely mentioned that the custard was excellent and that I thought I would take a rest for a few days.

"The store will dock you," she said, quickly.

"You shall not lose anything," I returned.

She reddened. "I wasn't thinking of that," she said. "You can share what we have, since you're Susie's friend. But, heaven knows, every little bit comes handy enough. One of my neighbors will be put out on Monday unless her rent is paid. Susie's going without the new waist she's set her heart on so as to help out."

Some light flared within me. With all my heart I longed to be rich again. I could help Dennis to achieve, had he half the equipment his mother dreamed for him. The white light grew radiant; it burned all defining lines away. These men and women were like other men and women, with hopes and ambitions. They had capacity for sacrifice and noble friendship.

"You're a very good woman, Mrs. Callahan," I cried.

Sometimes that white light flashed its message during the blistering hot days of August when I knew the bitterness of sitting in the waiting room of the dispensary. It mattered not that Susan assured me that the best doctors gave their services; it was bitter, bitter gall to me.

On one of the last days in August I dragged myself up the tenement stairs alone, Susan having gone somewhere with her plumber. I was too tired to admonish her about her flippant attitude toward this man. And perhaps, after all, even in Susan, child of the people, was a fineness, a sweetness. . . . Strange how that white light persisted!

Upstairs in the stuffy, odorous parlor, someone rose to me with outstretched arms. It was Mr. McAvoy. He caught me to him. "O, my little love," he cried. "I came to you as soon as ever I could. My brave, brave darling! We shall be married at once."

It all happened very quickly. Early the next morning a carriage came to call for me. I said good-by to Susan and her mother and was driven to the hotel in which Mr. McAvoy had taken a suite. He left me to make arrangements for our immediate marriage.

Do I love him? Well, the exquisite gray and rose room is sweet with flowers, and always I shall have flowers and the lovely things so necessary to my happiness. Mr. McAvoy knows my sensitiveness. He came rushing a thousand miles to rescue me from an environment I had been forced into by unpropitious circumstances. I shall learn to love him.

I should have died kept in the black dungeon of the past few months. Those of less fine organism, of course, manage to survive, and in truth to extract some joy out of their days. But certainly I shall not soon forget those poor creatures with whom I have been thrown, though Mr. McAvoy thinks it best that I do not dwell on them. He understands me so well.

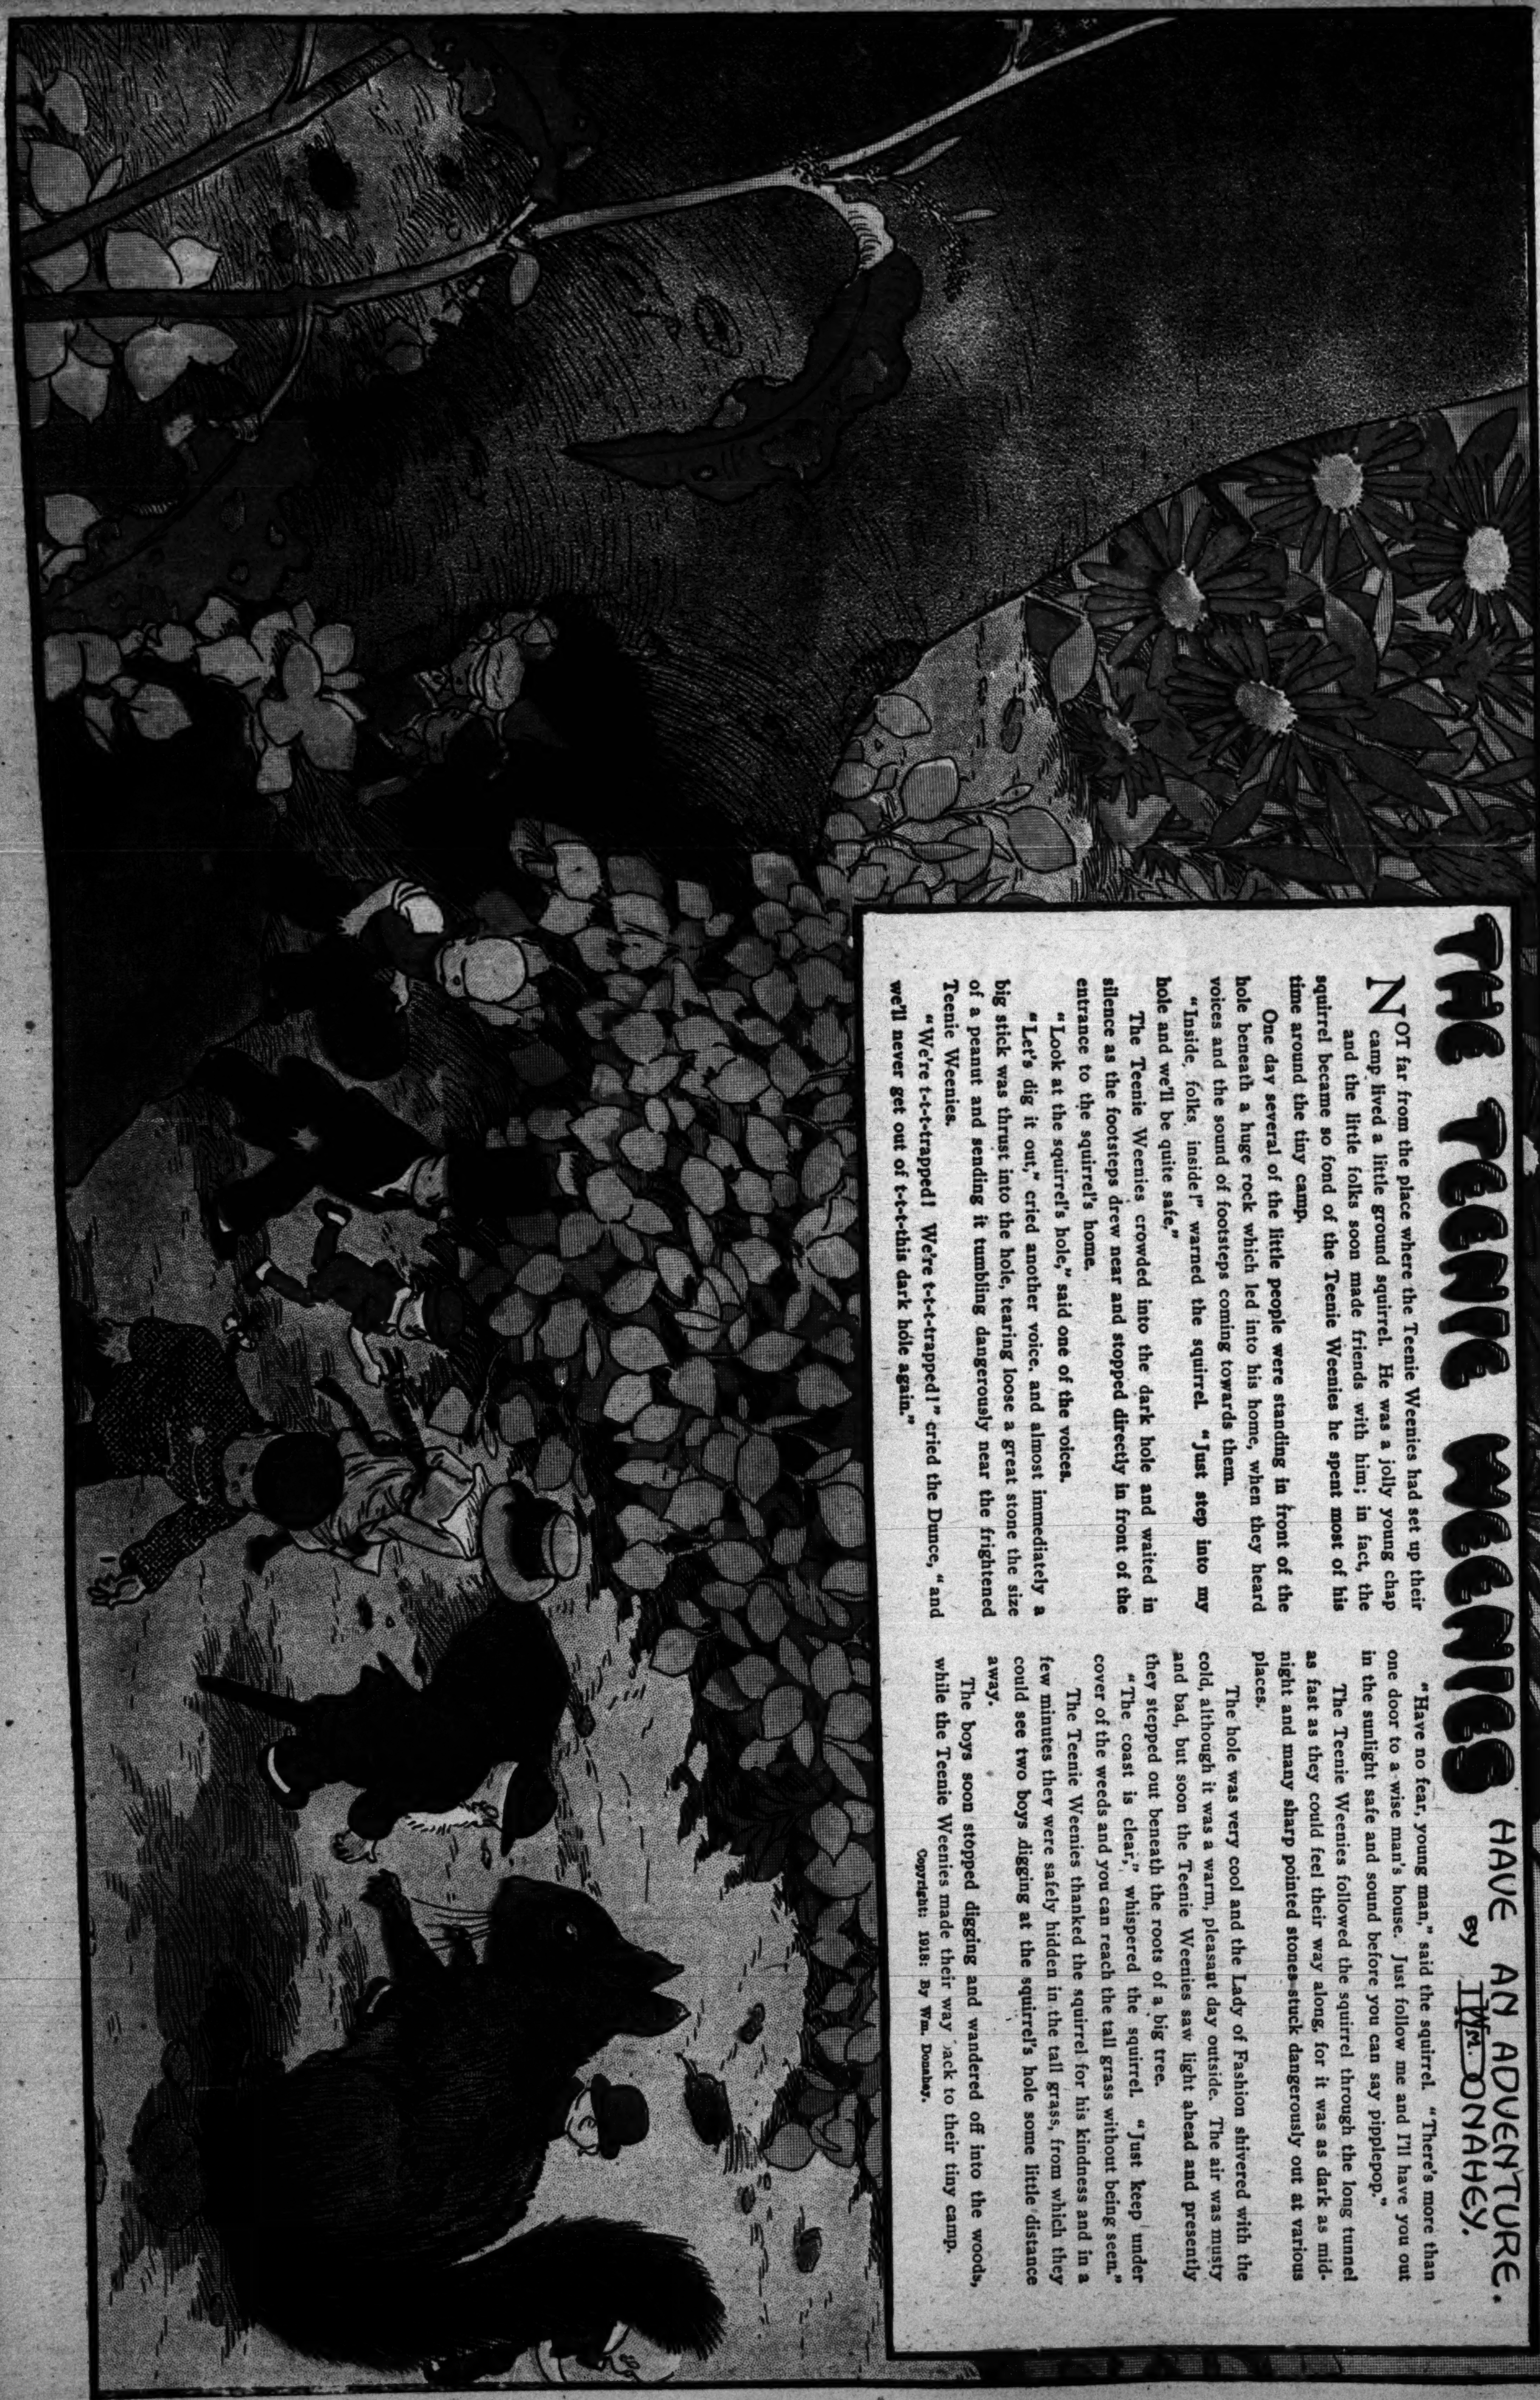
"Are you asking me to marry you, Mr. McAvoy?" I asked.



THE TEENIE WEENIES HAVE AN ADVENTURE.

By Wm. Donahey.

NOT far from the place where the Teenie Weenies had set up their camp lived a little ground squirrel. He was a jolly young chap and the little folks soon made friends with him; in fact, the squirrel became so fond of the Teenie Weenies he spent most of his time around the tiny camp.

One day several of the little people were standing in front of the hole beneath a huge rock which led into his home, when they heard voices and the sound of footsteps coming towards them.

"Inside, folks, inside!" warned the squirrel. "Just step into my hole and we'll be quite safe."

The Teenie Weenies crowded into the dark hole and waited in silence as the footsteps drew near and stopped directly in front of the entrance to the squirrel's home.

"Look at the squirrel's hole," said one of the voices.

"Let's dig it out," cried another voice, and almost immediately a big stick was thrust into the hole, tearing loose a great stone the size of a peanut and sending it tumbling dangerously near the frightened Teenie Weenies.

"We're t-t-t-trapped! We're t-t-t-trapped!" cried the Dunce, "and we'll never get out of t-t-t-this dark hole again."

"Have no fear, young man," said the squirrel. "There's more than one door to a wise man's house. Just follow me and I'll have you out in the sunlight safe and sound before you can say pipplepop."

The Teenie Weenies followed the squirrel through the long tunnel as fast as they could feel their way along, for it was as dark as midnight and many sharp pointed stones stuck dangerously out at various places.

The hole was very cool and the Lady of Fashion shivered with the cold, although it was a warm, pleasant day outside. The air was musty and bad, but soon the Teenie Weenies saw light ahead and presently they stepped out beneath the roots of a big tree.

"The coast is clear," whispered the squirrel. "Just keep under cover of the weeds and you can reach the tall grass without being seen."

The Teenie Weenies thanked the squirrel for his kindness and in a few minutes they were safely hidden in the tall grass, from which they could see two boys digging at the squirrel's hole some little distance away.

The boys soon stopped digging and wandered off into the woods, while the Teenie Weenies made their way back to their tiny camp.

Food Facts and Hints for the Patriotic Housewife

LEARN A LITTLE AND SAVE A LITTLE EVERY DAY

By Elizabeth O. Hiller

All measurements are made level in these recipes. A teaspoon of regulation size holds sixty drops. Three level teaspoons equal one level tablespoon. Sixteen level tablespoons equal one cup (one-half pint). The half pint measuring cups are the standard measuring cups used in modern cooking.

SUGGESTIONS FOR SALADS.

WHO is not fond of salads? Our taste for salads is an inheritance from classic times and eastern lands. In the hot climate of the orient salads were classed among earth's choicest productions. At the Passover of the Hebrews salads were served combined with oil and vinegar. The Greeks served the lettuce of Smyrna dressed with oil at the close of their feasts.

The oldest historians make frequent mention of salad plants dressed with oil, and in biblical lore Moses tells of how the children of Israel wept again and said, "We remember the things we did eat in Egypt—the cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions, and garlic dressed with oil."

A salad has this superiority over all other productions of the culinary art: A salad, but not all salads, is suitable to serve upon any occasion or to any class or condition of men. Among the true epicures, however, without a fresh new tempting salad, no matter if perfection itself had been reached in the other courses, the luncheon or dinner party would not pass as an unqualified success.

While salads may be compounded of all kinds of meat, fish, shellfish, crustaceans, nuts, vegetables, fruits, etc., two things are indispensable to every kind and grade of salad, the foundation of fresh vegetables, which includes the lettuce, or "greenery," and the dressing.

A salad, as a rule, has three good qualities: It is wholesome, it may be economical, and also attractive. It is wholesome in that it adds to the diet the fresh, green, uncooked vegetables and mild acids, both of which are especially beneficial. In cooking vegetables much mineral matter is lost, which is of course retained in the uncooked vegetables and greens of the salad.

It is economical, since in a salad we may make use of leftover portions. There is scarcely any meat, fish, or vegetables left from dinner that cannot be used in combination with crisp green herbs in this way.

It is difficult for some people to realize what a close connection exists between the eye and the digestive organs; even a plain dish properly prepared and attractively served adds materially to one's appetite and digestive powers. A well made salad has been called "the most attractive part, or the flower of the dinner."

Salads are dressed with oil, acid, and condiments. It might be well here to repeat an old Spanish proverb that declares that four persons are required to make a salad—"a counselor for salt, a miser for vinegar, a spendthrift for oil, and a madman to whip it all together." The dressings are classified as follows: French dressing, mayonnaise dressing, and a cooked or cream dressing. The latter is of American origin, while the two former are French productions.

French dressing is used for green vegetables and for fruits and nuts, and to marinate cooked vegetables, meats, and fish used in salads; it should be well drained from these materials, if they are afterward to be served with mayonnaise.

Mayonnaise dressing is used for some meats and fish, some varieties of fruits, and for some vegetables.

The food value of some combinations used in salads, especially those dressed with mayonnaise, makes a dish substantial enough for a hearty meal. Their digestibility depends to a great extent on the tenderness and crispness of the different materials that enter into their composition.

* *

Mayonnaise of Halibut on Cucumbers.

Have ready a chicken halibut steak cut one and one-half inches thick. Steam until the skin and bones can be easily removed without destroying the shape of the steak. Pour over a marinade made of two tablespoons of olive oil, one tablespoon of vinegar, and a sprinkle of salt and pepper; let stand until cold, then chill thoroughly. Dispose on serving dish and surround with small lettuce heart leaves, tucking stems under fish so that the tops of leaves will stand upright. Garnish the top of fish with stars of mayonnaise, arrange thin slices of cucumber, first dipped in French dressing, then finely chopped parsley between the lettuce leaves, standing them on the edges like wheels. Pass mayonnaise with the salad.

* *

Romaine, Tomato, and Green String Bean Salad.

Peel, cut in halves, and chill three smooth, firm tomatoes; chill two cups of cold cooked green string beans. Pick over and separate the leaves of one well bleached head of romaine. Marinate each separately with French dressing; use Tarragon vinegar and rub bowl with cut clove of garlic. Add one-half teaspoonful of grated onion juice. Arrange in serving platter, surround with tomatoes and beans arranged criss-cross in a border around tomatoes.

* *

Veal and Cucumber Salad.

Remove all browned portions from cold roast veal. Cut into one-half inch cubes, marinate with French dressing, and let stand an hour in a cool place. When ready to serve moisten with mayonnaise or cooked dressing, dispose in the center of serving dish, and surround with prepared cucumbers.

Select a long, slender cucumber. Pare with a fluted knife. Cut in thin slices, crosswise. Chill thoroughly and surround mound of veal with slices overlapping one another. Marinate with French dressing. Arrange a border of cress about the cucumbers. Sprinkle cucumbers with finely chopped chives and sprinkle veal generously with paprika.

* *

Potato and Nasturtium Salad.

Cut boiled new potatoes in one-half inch cubes; there should be one quart. Add one-half cup of chopped sweet gherkins, two tablespoons of finely chopped nasturtium seeds, and three tablespoons of finely chopped chives; toss all lightly together. Marinate with French dressing. Rub a salad bowl with a cut clove of garlic, arrange salad in bowl, surround with a border of small nasturtium leaves and blossoms. Strew top of salad with blossoms cut in bits; use shears for this purpose.

* *

Beets and Beet Green Salad.

Scrub young beets clean, cut off tips of leaves and coarse stems, and look over carefully. Fill a stock pot half full of boiling salted water, add beets and tops, and cook until beets are tender. Drain in colander until quite dry, cut tops from beets, chop tops fine, season with more salt, pepper, and butter or bacon fat with one-half cup of crisp bacon bits. Pack in a ring mold. Chill. Rub the skins from the beets, cut in slices crosswise. Marinate with French dressing and chill. When ready to serve unmold greens on bed of cress, fill ring with beets, sprinkle with finely chopped pecan nut meats, add more dressing, and serve.

* *

Salmon Mold.

Drain a one pound can of salmon from the liquor, rinse well, and flake. Mix thoroughly one-half tablespoon of sugar, one-half teaspoon of salt, one-half teaspoon of flour, one teaspoon of mustard, and a few grains of cayenne. Add two egg yolks, one and one-half tablespoons of melted butter, three-quarters cup of thin cream or milk, and one-quarter cup of vinegar. Cook in a double boiler, stirring constantly until the mixture thickens; add three-quarters tablespoon of gelatin, previously soaked in two tablespoons of cold water, strain, and add to flaked salmon. Fill circular or individual molds, chill, unmold, and serve with cucumber sauce.

* *

Cucumber Sauce.

Beat one-half cup of heavy cream stiff, add salt and a few grains of cayenne pepper to taste, and gradually two tablespoons of vinegar, then add one medium size cucumber pared, chopped, and drained as dry as possible and sufficient onion juice to flavor delicately.

* *

Hot Ham Sandwiches.

Spread rounds of war bread with minced ham, seasoned with paprika and prepared mustard. Put together in pairs, press edges, and soak one minute in eggs slightly beaten and diluted with milk; allow two tablespoons of milk to each egg. Saute sandwiches in equal parts of butter and lard. Brown on one side, turn and brown the other. Serve at once.

* *

Devilled Cheese in Biscuit.

Work to a cream one 10 cent cream cheese, add one teaspoon each of prepared mustard (domestic or imported), Worcestershire sauce, tomato catsup, one-half tablespoon of finely chopped chives, and season highly with salt and paprika. Spread between small baking powder biscuit or pass through a pastry bag and rose tube over large soda crackers. Serve in fancy baskets at luncheon, thimble, or knitting parties instead of regulation sandwiches.

* *

Watermelon Cones.

Chill the melon by laying on ice or covering it with ice water several hours. Cut slices from the ends that the halves may stand level and firm. Cut melon in halves crosswise and arrange each half on a wreath of foliage. Grape, currant, or maple leaves may be used. With a salad spoon scoop out the red pulp in cone shaped pieces and roll each cone in freshly grated cocoanut. Serve on cold plates. Pass powdered sugar.

* *

Mountain Trout with Crisp Bacon.

Clean fresh mountain trout without removing heads or tails, removing fins; sprinkle with salt and pepper and dredge lightly with flour or cornmeal. Have ready a hot frying pan, with bacon fat to cover bottom of pan; drop in fish and saute a golden brown, first on one side, turn and brown the other. They should be brown and crisp and only a few should be cooked at a time. Spread with maitre d'hotel butter, arrange on serving platter, alternate with crisp bacon.

* *

Sauted Fish.

Clean small fish, skin and sprinkle with salt and pepper; dredge with flour, dip in egg and seasoned cornmeal or cracker crumbs. Cook in an iron spider in a small amount of tried out salt pork fat. If fish are thin it will require from ten to twelve minutes; if thick, fifteeen to twenty minutes will be required.

* *

Hashed Codfish.

Wash salt codfish in cold water and pick in small pieces; there should be one and one-half cups. Wash, pare, and cut potatoes in small cubes; there should be two and one-half cups. Cook fish and potatoes in boiling water to cover. When potatoes are soft turn into a colander and drain well. Try out fat salt pork in an iron spider; remove scraps. There should be fat enough in the pan to moisten the mixture. Turn in fish and potatoes, toss until thoroughly moistened; season with pepper and salt if necessary. Then cook slowly until crisp and brown underneath. Fold as an omelet. Serve with egg sauce; garnish with hard cooked eggs, whites cut in rings and yolks forced through potato ricer over top of hash.

* *

Cantaloupe Sherbet.

Remove the seeds and stringy portion from two large ripe cantaloupes, scoop out the pulp and rub it through sieve or force it through a potato ricer. There should be two cups of pulp. Add to pulp one-half cup of sugar, one-fourth teaspoon of salt, the juice of half a lemon, and one-half cup of Sherry wine. Freeze, using equal measure of crushed ice and rock salt. Remove dasher, cover and set aside in a cool place until ready to serve. The whites of two eggs beaten until stiff may be added to the mixture when half frozen, which will increase the bulk materially.

* *

Mint and Ginger Ale Punch.

Bruise the leaves of twenty bunches of mint in a mortar with a wooden pestle (a chopping bowl and wooden potato masher will do). To the prepared leaves add the juice of ten dozen lemons and three dozen oranges. Add gradually ten pounds of sugar, stirring constantly. Let stand several hours until sugar is dissolved, stirring occasionally. Strain through cheesecloth and pour over cracked ice. Dilute with ginger ale. Serve in glasses; garnish with springs of mint.

This will serve 250 people.

* *

Flaky Wheatless Pastry for Pies.

Sift together one and one-half cups of barley flour, one-half cup of rice flour, half teaspoon of salt, and one-half teaspoon of baking powder. Chop in one-half cup of shortening and gradually add cold water to form a soft paste. Chill and use as ordinary paste. This will make one pie with two crusts and one shell for an open pie. One-half cup of corn flour (not corn meal) may may be used in place of the half cup of barley flour.

* *

Blackberries for Canning.

This delicious and useful fruit grows wild in great abundance through some parts of the country, but in later years several varieties have been cultivated. The choicest of these are Burbank's Mammoth. Blackberries are declared to be one of the greatest of small fruits introduced for a long time. Unknown to the world in general, they have been grown for centuries in the Himmalaya mountains and this variety was introduced into this country in 1905. Then there is the Dorchester, that ripens from ten days to two weeks earlier than other varieties. The Dorchester is a sweet and fine flavored fruit. Blackberries are in season from about July 10 to Sept. 1. They are at their best from the middle of July to the middle of August.

The berries should be ripe but firm. Carefully pick over, removing all imperfect berreis. See that the berries are clean. Pack firmly into sterilized pint jars, fill jars almost full, add four tablespoons of sugar to each jar (this makes a heavy sirup; use half this quantity if sugar is scarce), and fill jars full to overflowing with fresh, cold water. Put new rubbers on jars, set covers in position, and place jars on rack in cooking vessel. Fill vessel with cold water to a depth that will bring the water up two inches on the outside of jars. Cover vessel, place on range, and bring to boiling point. Let boil five minutes, seal jars tight, and continue boiling five minutes. Remove from vessel, set aside for twenty-four hours (out of a draft). On the following day place in vessel as on the first day, add water, and boil ten minutes. Remove and let stand twenty-four hours and on the third day repeat as directed on the second day. Wipe jars, when cool, store.

Blackberry Jam.

Select fresh berries, pick them over carefully. Mash a few at a time in a preserving kettle, using a wooden potato masher. Continue this until all the fruit is used. Bring slowly to the boiling point and add gradually an equal quantity of granulated sugar previously heated in a granite dripping pan in the oven. Boil slowly forty-five minutes, stirring often. Store in small jelly glasses. Blackberry jam must be watched and stirred carefully while cooking, as the seeds fall to the bottom of kettle and are liable to scorch. To heat sugar for jams and jelly, measure the required quantity and strew it evenly over the bottom of a granite dripping pan. Place in a moderate oven and shake the pan occasionally or stir sugar with a large spoon that it may heat throughout without browning.

* *

Blackberry and Apple Jelly.

Pick over berries. There should be six pounds. Mash them with a wooden pestle; add two cups of water and three pounds of apples, cored and sliced without paring. Let them cook slowly, occasionally stir and mash the fruit. When apples are soft, strain mixture through a jelly bag. Return juice to range and bring to the boiling point and add six pounds of sugar made warm in the oven; cook twenty to thirty minutes, skim when necessary, and stir occasionally. Turn into sterilized jelly glasses, cover with a thin layer of paraffin, replace covers, and store. The apple juice added to these berries produces a firmer and better flavored jelly than when the berries are taken alone.

SAVING ON THE SUGAR.

THE history of sugar rationing shows that no food substance may be so quickly swept into a man's muscles, and be so soon felt in his body as warmth and energy, as sugar. The history of sugar indulgence shows that no food will so nearly sear the membranes and muscles of a human body, especially if these are as sensitive as those of the child, and that no food will so load up the distended and unresistant body cells of a deteriorated human body, giving it disgraceful and distorted bulk, as sugar.

Everybody knows that it is a sort of embryo alcohol, stimulating a little less instantly, and yielding far more in the shape of calories than does the alcohol. Calories are not what the fat man needs, especially sugar calories.

The world's taste for sweets having been developed, and justification for the sugar craving having been established, men are not going to give up sweets in a minute.

Though tea and soda drinking and candy eating may become vices, many a tired person has got valuable refreshment on a midafternoon with a lump or two of sugar in his tea or with a lemonade sweetened with sugar or sirup. If made at home anybody knows that it takes about four level tablespoons of sugar to make the juice of one large lemon tolerably sweet. However, that same sugar cooked with an equal quantity of water would give a smoother drink and go about twice as far. The lemonade as a liquid satisfies instant thirst, but the nearly immediate body comfort that comes from it is due to the sugar. If there are any instant discomforts, as with some people, those too may be due to the sugar as well as to the lemon. Either the acid or a mixture of that strength of sugar may irritate the stomach.

Real Nutritive Need.

It is my own theory that the universal tea drinking in every office and shop as well as in every public tearoom and hotel in England has been the result of a real nutritive need, but since it has been an enormous contributor to sociability this is lost sight of. The heat of the tea and the sweet cakes that go with it take the place of our sodas and sundaes. In France it used to be the sweet pastries, before they adopted the English custom, that were eaten in the afternoon. A few years ago they had adopted the English tea drinking, as had a large part of the civilized world, but these Frenchmen had also kept their pastries. Pure indulgence in sweets was almost as great as with us.

In a recent article in the New Republic about the work of the Y. M. C. A. in France there is the following: "Uniforms were being repaired. Fudge was being cooked. A phonograph was playing. Officers and men both, with the tension all gone out of their faces in spite of the terrific echo in the air, were sitting around, talking and talking."

In every such account there is some such statement as this about a sweet. And, of course, it is not only the men over there but men and women over here that need to have tension taken out of their faces. And if part of this is to be done by sweets, ten times as much in this social fashion will be required as for the men over there. A common placard tells us that it takes ten men over here to keep one over there.

* *

On Restricted Allowance.

What shall we do then on a restricted allowance of granulated sugar? There are no end of things we may do. Many of these have been found and more are constantly being discovered.

First, we might consider getting on without the sweets entirely, on such social or loafing occasions as pictured by the Y. M. C. A. workers. Little muffins or sandwiches, preferably open and garnished, may be served with an afternoon tea. And it is my own special hobby that some crisp celery with these may take the place of a sweet. When of high grade it is sweet and almost a luxury. Nuts, dates, and figs contain almost too many calories to make them dietetically acceptable for this semi-social function.

Drop cakes of every sort and type are coming into great popularity, since they can be made without white flour, and there is quite a group of these that can be made with next to no sugar or with none at all. Reason a little about it and you will see why. The white of egg before it is beaten to a mountain is a small amount of material and accordingly requires but little sugar to sweeten it and no more when whipped. If, however, you add something not sweet to it, like oatmeal, you must add sugar for that. If you add chopped nuts, or raisins, or dates, or dried and toasted ground cake crumbs you can get on with next to no sugar. Ground popcorn or corn flakes with cocoanut require less sugar than does oatmeal. With the corn flakes and cocoanut molasses may be used. Prepared almond paste with white of egg requires next to no sugar, and one may grind and prepare her own paste.

* *

Puffed Rice Cakes.

An experiment I tried the other day with drop cakes turned out fairly well, although I know I can improve upon it. It was with puffed rice. Puffed rice is being used for various dainties, and because it is partially caramelized these require less sugar than flour. If you wet this puffed rice it breaks down to almost nothing in bulk, but there may be reason for doing so. At any rate here is what I did:

Cook one cup of puffed rice with a heaping tablespoon of glucose, or two level if the glucose is heated so it will run easily, and two tablespoons of water until it is a sticky cooked sirup. Pour this slowly over one beaten egg white and then add one cup or more of puffed rice and a teaspoon of vanilla. Drop on the bottom of a dripping pan in teaspoon lumps.

If baked of this mixture, these may wrinkle, but if you add two teaspoons of sugar or a little more, you can cook them so that they will remain like stiff little rocks. It will require at least twenty minutes in a hot oven, longer than when they are sweetened with granulated sugar.

Cakes made like this will not drop to pieces or crumble as do similar cakes made with sugar, and are more like the true meringue. Perhape it was not necessary to have the puffed rice in the first cooked mixture, but I tried cooking the rice and glucose together, and as it did not act quite right I added the water. If white corn sirup had been used probably no water would have been required, and there would have been no need of a sugar to get a little cake that would not wrinkle in cooling. Perhaps more puffed rice would have prevented that. But the fact that they may wrinkle does not affect their flavor. By the way, in these white of egg confections the vanilla flavoring may be distinctly a conservator of sugar.

Molasses Cream Caramels.

People still want candy and buy it. To make candy under the new conditions without sugar requires considerable knowledge of candy making, so that one may rectify any unfavorable condition that may arise. By making a number of rectifications, by additions of various sorts, I got a cream caramel without a bit of sugar that was quite a success. I intended to follow a simpler recipe, quoting it, than the one I made up, but here is what I did, using as small a quantity of materials as could conveniently be used:

The ingredients were: One-fourth cup of cocoa, one-half cup of milk, three-fourths cup of molasses, one-fourth cup of corn sirup, one egg yolk, one-half cup of cream, one tablespoon of butter, one teaspoon of vanilla. Dissolve the cocoa in half the milk and cook over the fire until it thickens, stirring all the time to keep it smooth. Add the rest of the milk and cook and stir again. Add to this the molasses and sirup and stir until it boils, then beat up the egg yolk and beat the cream with it, and stir into the hot mixture slowly so that boiling does not stop.

Some butter was added because the mixture got too thick, although stirred frequently to keep it smooth. One egg yolk was undoubtedly enough for twice the quantity of other ingredients, but I had this yolk left over from something, so used it all.

* *

Temperature for Cooking.

It is hard to say to what degree of temperature this mixture should be cooked, because when dropped in water pieces of this keep their form as they would not without the egg. However, a temperature of a little over 230 degrees seemed all right because it was so thick. This made a caramel which would cut into squares easily without pulling and was not so clingy as to pull out tooth fillings.

When a caramel cannot thus be cut, that is, is not either creamy or brittle enough, it is always possible to work each square into shape with two knives, even if one side has pulled out an inch.

When this quantity is doubled, except for the egg yolk, it would be much easier to cook the whole, and it would probably have to be cooked to a higher temperature. It would, however, be in better condition for receiving a half cup or cup of chopped nuts or some chopped raisins. Caramels like these are excellent with chopped fruit, which, of course, extends the quantity.

* *

Many Ways to Save.

This experiment was but one attempt without sugar and fairly successful. The recipe certainly can be perfected, but this way of presenting it while it was going through the workshop seems to me to show something worth something. Today I have both more and less respect for a recipe than ever before.

On the face so many recipes look equally good. The woman who has presented the less efficient of the two recipes, especially if both look as simple as possible, cannot see why hers is not as good as the other. I know but can hardly tell; that is, it is difficult to make it clear. Perhaps I can later on.

Where there is a will to save sugar it will certainly be done. There is little need to enumerate the ways that thousands are already using: cutting out coffee, cooking prunes long and slowly in a covered utensil so that they are palatable without added sweetening of any sort, dipping nuts and raisins in chocolate for a confection, making old fashioned rice puddings, and in particular making Indian or corn meal pudding which is cooked long and slowly like the rice and is sweetened with molasses.

There is no end of other simple ways by which one can get on and hardly miss the sugar. I know coffee drinking people who live well and entertain and who do not go without cakes, who have seldom used more per person per month than the law now requires.

Better Housekeeping

By Mary Bronson Hartt

CARE OF THE REFRIGERATOR.

MAKERS and owners of de luxe ice chests lined throughout with snowy porcelain, without seam or crack, do their best to persuade the rest of us that zinc lined refrigerators are pestilential germ traps, "only tolerable if daily scalded with washing soda"—and all that sort of thing.

The plain fact is that a zinc lined box made by a good firm has its seams and overlaps at points where there's the minimum of risk that any foodstuff can possibly find lodgment. Slate shelves, properly washed when anything is spilled, are clean, if not beautiful. For that matter glass shelves can be put into a zinc lined box.

With reasonable care that no food shall ever touch the sides, the only part of the ice box which stands in need of violent disinfection is the ice compartment and the drain pipe—parts which are no whit more sanitary in the white lined paragon among refrigerators than in the more modest zinc affairs!

Frequent scalding of the whole box is utterly unnecessary and ruinously wasteful of ice. As for the frequent "sunning" to which our friends of the white lined boxes tell us our "unsanitary" chests should be subjected—it is preposterous.

* *

Scald Pipes Weekly.

Ice compartment and pipes want boiling water down them once a week, be their lining white or gray. It is well to scald the pipe oftener than that if the ice gets low enough so the piece can be easily lifted out (which for economy of cold it shouldn't). Special refrigerator pipe brushes are on the market which will clear the pipe of the jellylike deposit from the melting ice.

This jellylike deposit, by the way, hideous as it looks, is composed of harmless enough bacteria and is nothing to go into spasms over. It isn't clean. We don't want it there. Boiling water should dissolve it away. But there's no harm in realizing that it doesn't represent pestilence and sudden death!

Another nightmare of the housekeeper concerns the connection of the refrigerator drip pipe with the sewer. This is a vitally important matter. Proper trapping to seal out sewer gas and proper ventilation of said trap by a pipe to the roof cannot be too much insisted upon. But if a responsible plumbing expert has planned and executed the job we may sleep sound o' nights.

* *

Tests of Good Refrigerator.

Reflect that every suite in thousands of apartment houses has a refrigerator drained to the sewer and that the board of health permits it. It can scarcely be true, then, that a housekeeper who loves her family has got to go on dragging out overflowing drip pans from under her refrigerator or condemn her dear ones to the typhoid ward.

Boiling water with sulphonapthol in it is good to pour down the floor drain pipe. Follow it up with cold water, lest the change in temperature should empty the trap, breaking the water seal that is our safeguard against sewer gas.

Two tests of a good and sanitary refrigerator are for dryness and free circulation of cold air. You should be able to leave matches in an uncovered dish in the food chambers for twenty-four hours without damping them so that they do not readily ignite. A candle lighted and set on a refrigerator shelf when the ice compartment is full should show by the swaying of its flame the strength of the current of dry, cold air.

If you stick to the illogical practice of wrapping your ice, don't expect your refrigerator to come triumphant through this last test. It is not the ice, but the slow melting of the ice, which takes the heat out of the air and makes it fall, starting the steady circulation.

* *

Keep Food in Glass.

The coldest place in the refrigerator is the compartment directly under the ice where the chilled air falls. This is why we reserve this compartment for butter and milk, or the lemon jelly we want promptly to set. Milk is preferably kept in sealed bottles and butter under a glass cover, these commodities being so exceedingly sensitive to odors.

Jelly glasses or low glass jars such as tongue or finnan haddie is packed in make excellent receptacles for food in the refrigerator, which should never be crowded with china dishes. Small paper plates or butcher's wooden trays, protected by oiled paper, are good to set away food in. Or one might use the new paper jelly glasses. A pint fruit jar takes two inches less shelf room than a pint bowl.

If your chest ices from the top, have the lid adjusted with cord, pulley, and weight to help it go up and prevent its coming down on your head.

Attach the elusive ice pick and ice shaver to the refrigerator. A length of leather straps, tacked at intervals along the side of the box, makes a good place to thrust these implements and the refrigerator pipe brush.

Iceless cold storage is on its way. Already the more pretentious apartments chill their food by electric cold. As yet the process is beyond the dreams of ordinary housekeepers.

* *

Removing Fruit Jar Tops.

To unscrew the top of a fruit jar, take a strip of sandpaper in your hand so it will not slip. If that fails, try gripping the cover with the curved handles of the pliers. Or take in your hands two short, flat pieces of soft wood, gripping the refractory cover between them. Prying up the edge of the cover with the can opener lets in the air and helps loosen the cover. But it's odd if a top so loosened ever fits airtight again.

To extract onion juice, scrape a cut onion with the edge of a spoon, rather than with a knife. The juice gathers in the bowl of the spoon and you can judge of the quantity.

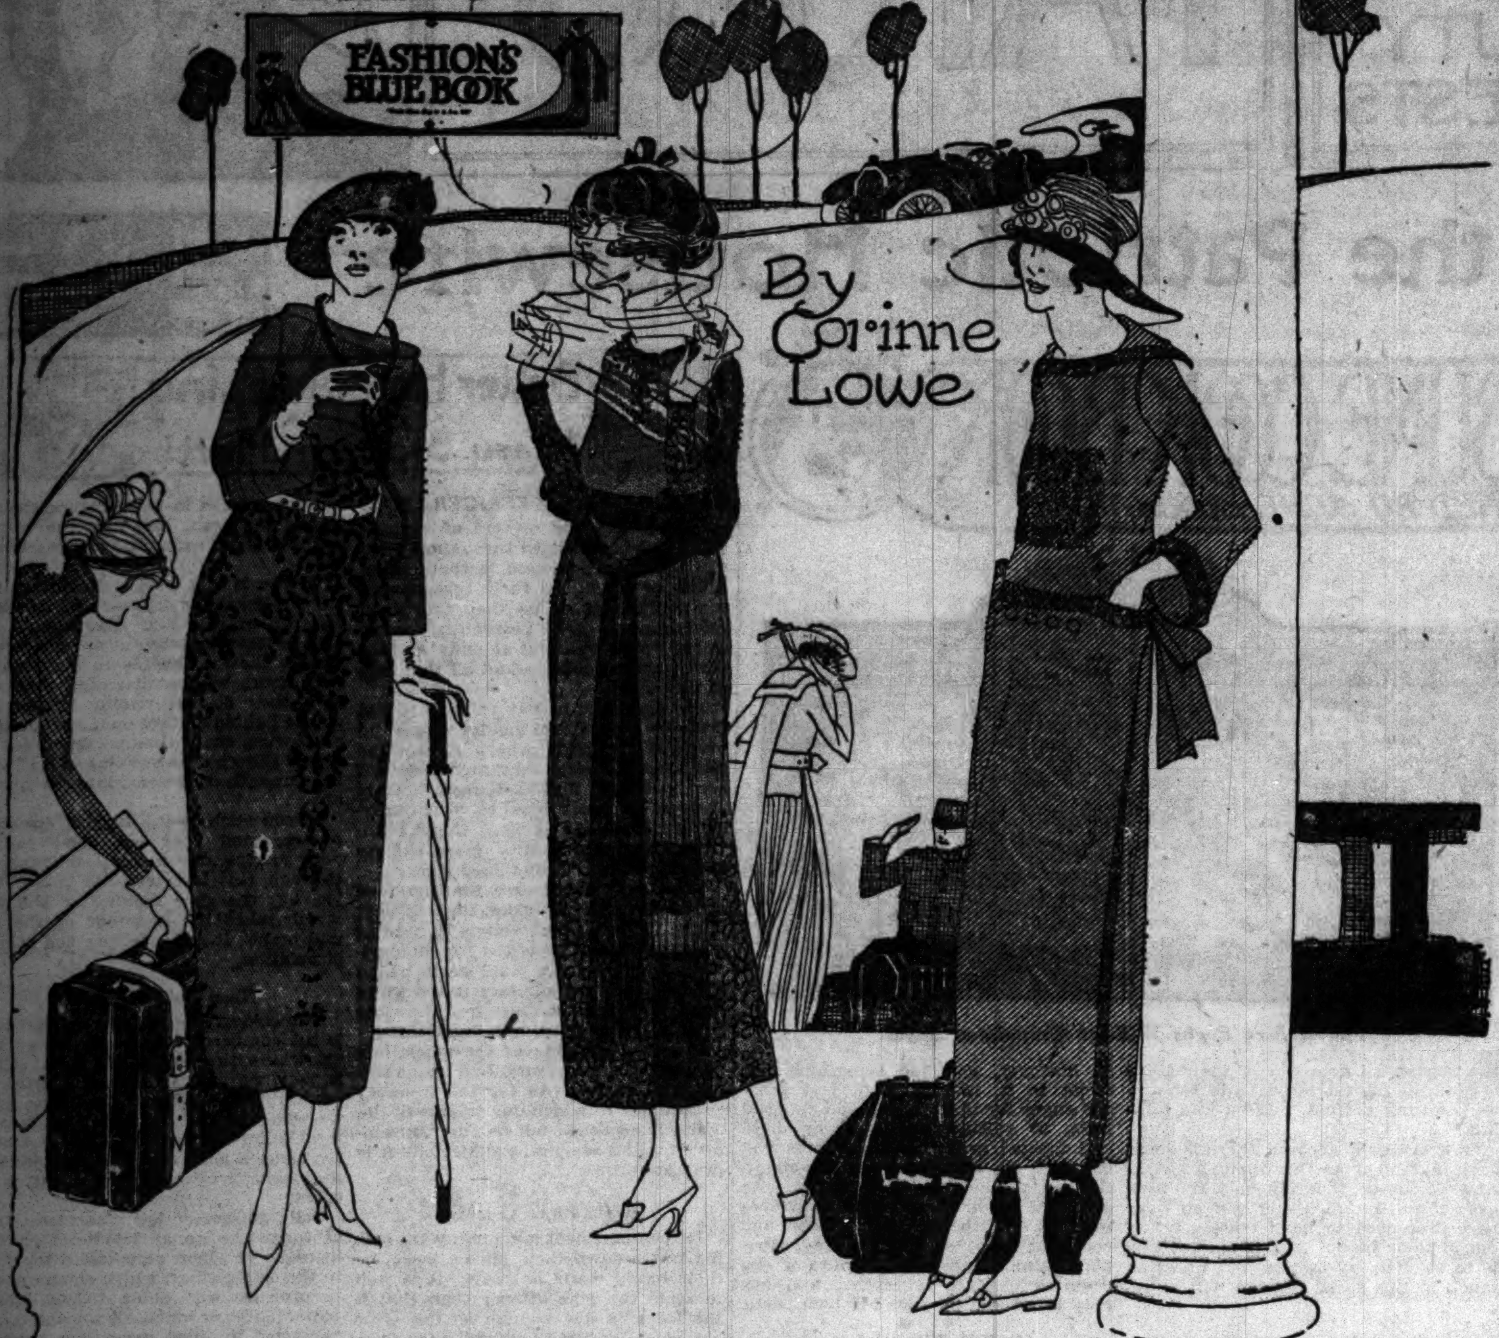
Embroidery Rages on New Tailored Frocks



By Corinne Lowe

FIRST catch your embroidery, seems to be the favorite maxim of the tailored dress designers of this year. Self-color embroidery is the leading feature on all three of the above French models designed for early fall wear. Reading from left to right, a blue serge held by a green leather belt; a navy tricotine where the embroidery is eyelet work and where black satin is combined with the fabric, and, last of all, a brown silk duvetyn.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Once when we were driving about Lake Como we were struck by the martyred expression of an Englishwoman sitting next to us. Remembering the story of a countrywoman of hers who at the same spot commanded the coachman in a bored tone to "Drive on," we ventured to ask what was the trouble.

"Isn't the scenery satisfactory?" said we.

"O, yes," replied she and then all the emotion of an over-swelling heart flooded her haggard face. "The scenery is all right," said she with a groan, "but," and her voice sank to a terrified whisper, "have you noticed them?"

"Them?" we repeated, "Who?"

"The scenery nudgers," replied she. "That's what I call them—people who are always grabbing your elbow and crying, 'Isn't it too beautiful!' O, how they have spoiled Italy for me—these scenery nudgers."

We often think of her term when we are called upon to admire certain things. The moment anybody demands admiration we experience a peevish and even morose obstinacy. We don't want to admire that particular object.

That is the way we felt about serges. The world is so full at present of what we may call serge nudgers that we had determined not to like these dresses. That is the mood in which we went to visit a late viewing of early fall models.

Arriving at the scene of the review we were told with great solemnity by the importer that nothing was going to be "so good for early fall and winter wear as the tailored frock of serge or tricotine." We stiffened our most remote vertebra. We'd see whether we were going to admire these same serge frocks.

Great was the triumph of the importer. Before we had got through with the show we were converted. We may even go and get an embroidered tricotine for ourselves.

The truth of it is that these early fall tailored frocks from Paris are quite the most stunning of the kind which have ever emigrated to America. Simple of cut, they are distinguished by such artful embroidery that it seems not like embroidery at all. Instead of being put on, one could almost swear that this needlework was part of the dress itself.

The tailored frocks shown above were selected from this recent importation. They show both the simplicity of present lines and the adroitness of the embroidery touches. Reviewing them, it is impossible to disbelieve the importer. Tailored frocks of this kind will be good from August right through the winter.

Although selected with a view to general adaptability, although any of the trio of dresses may be worn by women of all ages for almost all occasions, it has occured to us that these frocks would all be especially good for the college girl's wardrobe which is now commencing to brew. Any of these dresses would constitute, indeed, an admirable service frock all through the winter term.

At the extreme left we find a blue serge trimmed with self-color silk embroidery and held in at the waist by a narrow green leather belt. The center figure wears not serge but the popular tricotine which is also embroidered in self-color and which is combined with black satin.

As for the last, the importer who brought these over will tell you that, vying with tricotine and serge and Poiret twill in popularity, is the frock of silk duvetyn. This fabric in all the rich dark shades such as brown, navy, and green is promised for both street frocks and more elaborate afternoon models. Here we are giving a serviceability dress of brown duvetyn trimmed with embroidery in self-color and in its youthful lines particularly charming for the girl in her late teens or early twenties.

Among these tailored frocks tricotine is probably the leading fabric. Nearly always it is abetted by heavy embroidery and often there is some touch of the obsequious fringe. Next to embroidery as a trimming comes soutache braid which is used extensively on both suits and frocks.

But, though tricotine is so strong a leader, jerseys have by no means lost their crown. Tricolette, the heavy silk fiber jersey which swarmed out upon this last spring, is conspicuous in every big showing of French things for the early autumn. It, like tricotine, is heavily embroidered and frequently resorts to fringe as a pastime.

There is a new jersey which is reported as having been already an immense success at Deauville and other of the foreign resorts which, by the way, are said to be crowded. This is another Rodier patent and it is known as Djersella. A coarsely woven silk jersey, the latest idea is tapestry broderie on this background. For this purpose is used very narrow flat shoestring braid worked in a bold all-over pattern. The mesh of the material being so wide, it is possible to use the braid exactly as if it were thread.

Although this new Djersella has not yet reached our shores, the vivacious jersey conversationalist, M. Rodier, has sent us some other amasing things. Among such, there is a fabric composed of alternate stripes of fiber silk and wool. This is found in a collection of knitted coats and coat-dresses which have just recently come over. And, by the way, some weeks ago we showed the first of the knitted dresses to come to New York. They are blowing in at present in a perfect gale, these knitted garments. Usually the material is fiber silk, but every now and then they try their hands at wool. In either event these coats and frocks necessitate straight lines. Now and then there may be a group of plaits at the sides, but the rule is against such.

In mousing about among the importation we found a two piece suit which had just been taken out of the customs house. This was of knitted wool in a lovely shade of yellow. The coat straight and short pulled down over the head and it was edged with fringe. As a last touch came the vestee filling in the V at the neck. This shows you just how far the hardy knitting constitution can go in things.

Fur is by no means to be spoken of in a pensive, reminiscent tone. It is much to the fore in all the late imports. Of course, it isn't always honest to animal fur. Sometimes Rodier or Couduríer has done a little nature faking and given us good imitations of the real article. Genuine or camouflaged, however, fur is a feature on the early fall suits and dresses.

REAL LOVE STORIES

WHEN CUPID BLEW A TIRE.

Do you know a real love story—one that is stranger than fiction? It is the idea that is wanted. No attention will be paid to literary style. "The Tribune" will pay $5 for every story published. No manuscripts returned. Address Doris Blake, "The Tribune," Chicago.

MY mother promised that on my twenty-first birthday she would present me with something nice and she surely did. It was a neat little roadster. It was not long before I learned to drive, and mother and I used to go for delightful spins through the country around Chicago, where we lived.

One Sunday morning, however, I started out alone and headed north in Sheridan road. I was soon on the beautiful winding roads of the north shore suburbs.

In Highland Park, just as I was about to turn off the main street, I was shocked to hear one of the tires explode. Of course it had to happen just as I was passing the Army and Navy club, and the soldiers and sailors who were lounging about were soon on the scene to find out who was making all the noise.

I was so confused and embarrassed that I almost felt like running on the flat tire to a less conspicuous place where I could take out my "book of instructions" and find out how to change tires—something I did not know the first thing about.

But I pulled myself together and got out of the car and tried to camouflage my interested audience by pretending to be an expert mechanic, but it did not work. The boys cou'd see that I was bluffing, but they were on the job in a jiffy to help me out of my dilemma.

To my surprise I discovered that one of the soldiers was an old playmate of mine whom I had not seen since we were in the sixth grade together. We started school at the same time and always managed to get in the same room together. Then a sad parting came when his folks were obliged to move to New York.

I liked Billie and Billie liked me (when we were kids), and my heart went pitty-pat when I spied him. He said he thought my face looked familiar, but could not place me. When I recalled our school days he got so excited that I was afraid he was going to kiss me. He squeezed my hand and held it so long that I became confused and embarrassed some more, but tried to suppress it as best I could. By this time the new tire was put on and the little roadster was ready to travel some more. I thanked the boys for being so kind to me, and acknowledged that if it hadn't been for them I would have been "up against it."

I invited my friend in the car with me and started back to Chicago. He rode with me as far as Lincoln park, as he had to be back at the fort that evening. He took my address and said I would hear from him. He kept his word and called on me every time he could get a leave. I learned to love him dearly in the weeks that followed, and when he proposed in about six weeks I was mad with joy, but of course I didn't say "yes" the first time, as I wanted him to coax me. He did that to my entire satisfaction, and we decided to get married the next week. We had a pretty church wedding, although it was a rather quiet affair.

We are just as happy as we can be, and I let him drive my little roadster. Now instead of going to the Army and Navy club on Sundays he comes home to his wife.

Billie is so patriotic that he can hardly wait to "get over there" to be in the thick of it, so I have decided to show my patriotism, too, by becoming a Red Cross nurse.

A FRIEND IN NEED

Sally Joy Brown

I want to be the medium through which the friend in deed and the friend in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy, and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be only too happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send parcels to "The Tribune," but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

They Have No Bible.

"I belong to a young people's society and nearly every one but myself and a friend of mine has a small English Bible. As we cannot afford to buy one I was wondering if some one did not have one to give. I would certainly appreciate it. G. H."

I can safely promise both you and your friend that a Bible shall be forthcoming soon.

* *

Another Bible Wanted.

"I see some friend has a Bible to donate. I am an old soldier, 82, and would like to get a Bible. J. P. C."

I am sorry to report that the Bible has already been given elsewhere. I put in your letter knowing that a request from an old soldier will meet with ready response.

Between Four Walls.

"I have been shut in for the last two years, and am unable to walk out. I am writing this in the hope that perhaps some one has a vacant seat in her car and could occasionally take me for a ride through the park. Am residing on the north side and almost within walking distance of Lincoln park. Would appreciate the ride greatly, and try to repay in some other way. Please print this as soon as possible, as I am almost beside myself in between four walls. A. J. M."

This seems a modest request, and I am sure there is some woman with an automobile who will be only too happy to extend this pleasure to Mrs. A. J. M.

* *

Their Home's Too Small.

"I am asking for a bird cage that some one does not need, as I have a few young birds and they cannot much longer be in the same cake with the old ones, so if some one has an old cage they do not want I could call for it evenings or Sunday. M. H."

Is there any one who has a bird cage to give to M. H.?

* *

Invalid Wants Letters.

"I am a shut-in, having been an invalid for nearly a year. I wonder if any of the women who write to you would care to write to me occasionally? How pleasant that would be! One gets so lonely! C. K."

I hope I shall receive requests for the address of C. K. There are many I know who will be glad to write her and help to brighten the lonely days for her.

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER IN FRANCE

BY RHETA CHILDE DORR

GUARD SOLDIER OFF DUTY.

"I KNOW that my boy is being well cared for in his regiment and I'm not afraid of what may happen to him as long as he is on duty. But what about his off hours? What is to prevent him from falling into bad company?"

I know that this thought has troubled the minds of many mothers of soldiers now in France. And no wonder. Ever since the first training camps were set up in this country the most lurid tales have been spread abroad about the alleged immorality of the soldiers' off hours. Some of these tales were spread by pacifists and cowards who hoped to defeat the draft laws. Others were the result of a certain kind of imagination. The vast majority of them were untrue.

But even if any of them were true, if boys of 21, away from the restraining influences of home, found unusual opportunities for immorality right here in the United States, what must it be in France? Many American women have it firmly fixed in their minds that France is a shocking immoral country. It isn't, but I do not hope to be able to unsettle the conviction.

I will content myself with saying that even if France were a second Sodom or Gomorroh, our soldiers would be safe there—as safe, or safer, than they would be at home. The reason is that they are under military discipline and military supervision every hour of their lives. In their off hours they are supervised by the most efficient and powerful police force in the world, the military police of the American army.

Military police is what we call them for short. They are really assistant provost marshals. They are everywhere in France where there are American soldiers. They police Paris and all other cities, towns, and villages in our zone. They are found sitting at a little table in all the railroad stations, and every traveling American soldier, be he officer, noncom., or private, has to report the minute he arrives to the station marshal. This applies to all holders of military passes, Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. workers, and war correspondents.

* *

Watch Over Soldiers.

The marshal examines the papers of the traveling officer or soldier, stamps them, and enters the name and destination of the traveler in his book. This happens when the soldier leaves his base and when he returns. They keep track of our men on all their travels.

They also keep track of our soldiers in their daily walks abroad, whether on duty or pleasure bent. There are certain rules in our expeditionary force which apply to all alike, from Gen. Pershing down to Bill Smith, private, just arrived from Camp Funston or Camp Upton. One of these rules is that no member of the expeditionary force may associate with women of the submerged class.

If a military policeman sees an officer or a soldier in such company it is his duty immediately and without any delay to separate the two, and gather the offending man in. If he fails to do so and the fact is established, the policeman is punished. But he doesn't fail.

Some of our younger officers—only a few, I was assured—didn't believe at first that a simple private soldier would dare arrest them for the offense of having a "good time." Two of these new lieutenants tested it out in Paris once. They annexed a pair of women of the underworld and started out to find whatever might be left of the night life of the French capital.

What was their indignation when a slim youth of about 25, wearing the uniform of a private, with the sole addition of a brassard marked A. P. M., walked up to them, saluted, and stepped politely between them and the open door of the taxicab.

"Beg pardon, sirs," he said courteously, "I am obliged to remind you that you are transgressing the provisions of section —— of regulation —— of orders —— relating to associations with women. I shall have to request you to accompany me to headquarters."

The two new young officers declined the invitation, first with indignation, then with good natured appeals to the soldier's sporting blood. The soldier remained adamant, and then one of the officers, getting genuinely angry, thrust his fist under the man's nose. "What would you do if I were to push your face in and go on my way?"

The soldier policeman promptly drew his revolver and thrust it under the lieutenant's nose. "I would do my duty, sir," he replied, still courteously. But he was an American and couldn't hold in any longer. "By God," he exclaimed, "I wish you'd try it on. You're the kind of an officer the American army could afford to lose suddenly."

That settled it. The two officers went to headquarters, and they were punished. The one that attempted to frighten the young policeman got sent back to the United States. The men at headquarters agreed with the policeman that the United States army could afford to lose a man like that.

* *

Covers American Zone.

The military policeman, who is found all over our zone in France, does not wear blue clothes and a peaked cap. Neither does he carry a baton. He wears his soldier uniform and a white arm band on which the letters A. P. M., assistant provost marshal, appear in letters of red. He wears a belt and a revolver, and he carries plenty of ammunition with him.

He is a part of a service which has at its head Gen. Allaire, chief provost marshal of the army, one of Gen. Pershing's staff. He lives at the sequestered little town which houses the rest of the staff. Under him are many officers who command the regiments of assistant provost marshals, and they are held responsible for the order and good conduct of the army.

In Paris the military police have their headquarters in an old fashioned building in the Rue Ste. Anne, close to the heart of old Paris. The place was a hotel in pre-war days, and it looks much like a hotel now, with all the boarders in uniform. The big dining room has less style about it than formerly. At present it is furnished with long pine tables, scrubbed clean, and the dishes are mostly white enamel ware.

A one armed French soldier, with a most engaging smile and a pretty good knowledge of English, acts as elevator boy, and he told me once that when the war was over he was going to America. "I want to know how it feels," he said, "to belong, even for part of my life, to a country that can produce such boys as these."

They are a picked lot. It is an honor to be in the service, and only those in whose honor as well as valor the authorities have the greatest confidence ever make the service.

Gives Men a Good Time.

In Paris the lieutenant under whose direct command the force works is the most single minded man I think I have ever met. His whole existence seems bound up in his men. He even spends his off hours with them. One Monday when I went to the house in the Rue Ste. Anne to have a military pass stamped by the proper provost marshal this lieutenant of police told me that the day before he had taken the half of his men who were off duty to Versailles. They had a wonderful day, he said. The authorities even opened the palace museum for the Americans.

"Next Sunday," he said, "I am going to take the other half of the force down the Seine to a beautiful place where we can have dinner out of doors and have a look at French life of the old régime. I mean that my men shall get all there is in a foreign sojourn."

I told him that I thought he was pretty fine to give all his leisure to his soldiers. He blushed like a boy and said: "They deserve it and I enjoy it. Besides, it is a part of my job to make these men as intelligent individuals as possible. They need to be intelligent. They have eight hours a day of particularly responsible work.

"Here in Paris they have to keep their eyes out for deserters. It is their business to know that every American soldier who walks through a street here has a right to do it. They have to be keen to look for spies in American uniforms. O, yes, they have picked up more than a few of these gentry. They might have slipped past the French soldiers, because they don't know Americans, but they couldn't fool an American A. P. M. Every suspicious character gets nabbed sooner or later. If there is any doubt about his status our men bring him in here. If he can satisfy us, all right. But there is never an apology due him from the policeman.

* *

First on the Spot.

"One of our men may be transferred from patrol work to riding on railroad trains and keeping track of our soldiers on their travels. He may be transferred to the front, where he becomes a traffic cop and also one of the men who take captured Germans in charge.

"We have a school here for our motorcycle cops. These men become inspectors of police. They have an added responsibility. They speed directly to the scene of any great or small disaster, and they assist the French gendarmes and military police. When the long distance gun hit that church on Good Friday, killing seventy-six people, our men were the first on the spot. They helped rescue the wounded and they brought out the dead. They did excellent service in that great fire near Paris when the powder works blew up.

"As quickly as an air raid is over our men are out on their cycles looking up the damage inflicted by the bombs. They report back here where every bomb fell. Often they are able to put out small fires caused by the bombs.

"They are a fine bunch," ended the lieutenant. "Not one of my men has ever been in trouble, and the fact that our cooler here in Paris often has as many as 150 people in it shows not only that their work is essential, but that it is performed to the king's taste."

With that kind of a police force and that kind of officers commanding it, you can be sure that your sons have not much opportunity to go astray. Once in a while a man may evade the military police. Occasionally I have seen it done. But it happens rarely, and the chances are a hundred to one against it happening twice to any one man.

Varied Activities of Women.

Miss Evangeline Bishop of Cleveland claims to be the only woman in this country who has a war garden on land commandeered from a soldier in the German army.

Miss Margaret Sanderson of Boston has been appointed head of the work among disabled soldiers returning from France by Surgeon General Gorgas.

Determination to keep college athletics in the fore, despite the depletion of the athletic ranks by the war call, has resulted in the formation of girls' baseball teams at Mills' college and Stanford university in California.

The first women to enlist in the coast guard are Lucille and Genevieve Baker of Brooklyn, and the coast guard has asked the navy department for a special order permitting the enlistment of girls for clerical duties.

With a record of 200 men enlisted by her efforts, Miss Margot Barnard of New York has enlisted in the navy as a yeoman and will continue her recruiting work at about one-fourth of the salary she formerly received from the mayor's committee on national defense.

A new way of earning money for the Red Cross and at the same time saving $25,000 a month to the government has been found by women who have installed a large pig farm near Camp Mills so that the pigs can fatten on the camp garbage, which the government now pays to have removed.

If the war ends this year it will leave the German population with nineteen women for every man.

Mrs. Cassie Denney, a full blooded Indian of Oneida, Wis., has given three of her sons to the service of Uncle Sam in the present war, and says that the fourth will go as soon as he is old enough.

Nearly all the public utilities in England are being run by women, and they have even invaded the police and fire departments in many English cities.

It is estimated that there are 121 women between the ages of 20 and 44 in England to every 160 men, while France has 124 women to every eleven men.

Mrs. James Wilson, formerly chef to the late Queen Victoria, is now in this country giving cooking lessons to housewives.

Mamie Schumacher, aged 15 years, a domestic in the home of a St. Louis physician, recently transferred fifteen tons of coal from the curb to the basement of the physician's home.

The electric freight trucks used by the Pennsylvania railroad on its piers in New York City are operated by women. They work eight hours a day and are paid the same wages as men.

In the principal streets of Constantinople and other cities, Armenian and Syrian girls are being sold as slaves for a few dollars because their Turkish masters are no longer able to feed them.

Heavy Offensive Threatens Thin Line says

Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Or, what is your beauty ill? Write it in to me. I have a tonic, a diet, an exercise, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, Chicago Tribune.

DAUGHTER presented herself opposite table from father the other evening with a look he couldn't quite comprehend, but being a well trained father he just looked and listened and said nothing for five minutes. In that five he shot a glance over the soup, another over the fish, and scratched the latter's scales a trifle with the sharp edged appraisal of the strange looking substitute of his normally eyebrowed chee-ild.

"If a couple of them hairs dropped out where'd you get recruits to fill out the line?" he said.

"O, father, you're awfully old fashioned. All the girls are wearing thin eyebrows now. I suppose you'd want me to wear them as heavy as your mustache," she answered him not as her mother would have answered her father.

"Well, you will be," responded father, "if you keep pulling them out that way for long, young lady."

Which was score 10 for father!

For specialists in the business are reporting the growth of two hairs where one grew before and both of them of a coarse, bristly texture.

If you have been one of the unfortunates whose eyebrows would meet were it not for your unceasing activity with the tweezers you will appreciate the danger of a heavy growth of bristles where grew an exquisitely fine line of brow before. Or, if you have been a slave to the depilatory habit or the safety razor for removing hairs under the arms, again you will realize that the tendency of hair in its rebirth is coarseness.

If you have had any experience kissing father or hubby when he needed a shave again you may realize just how penetratingly bristly cut out hair may become.

One specialist, asked about this skinny eyebrow habit and its outcome, said he had had many complaints already from women and also an increase in his electrolysis business, electrolysis being the only permanent measure of removing superfluous hair.

"Isn't it true," he was asked, "that the elder one gets the greater tendency to hairy growth?"

"We need more fur as we grow older," he replied half jocosely, not wishing to commit himself.

So it looks, young lady, when you start pulling out those excess hairs of yours above the eyes you are in for a siege of trouble. The tweezers, although it is your favorite implement of torture, isn't the thing of joy you believe it at all! It's like a first shave in that a lifework is laid out for you unless you are willing to let a heavy growth stand.

At least, that's what certain specialists threaten! Of course, the observation must necessarily come from one who has watched the process! And a beauty specialist in whom I have much faith because of her total honesty refuses absolutely to shave or "tweeze" the eyebrows of her patrons because her experience is that, given a certain length of time for this work to be done, a patron becomes an enemy and blames her for not issuing a warning against the habit. And she has seen any number of cases where the eyebrows have come in again, after their owners got tired of the one line brow, in irregular, bushy disorder.

Much of the disorderliness might be assuaged, however, if the developing brows were trained down and shaped with the nightly use of an eyebrow brush dipped in vaseline and the line of the eyebrow followed in the brushing.

The hairs between the eyes are disfiguring, to be sure, and many women do "tweeze" them out. But if they could afford it the electrolysis treatment would be infinitely more satisfactory. Because it is the only permanent means of removing these wandering hairs. By this method an expert operator can remove any number of large hairs permanently without leaving any scars or causing much pain to the average skin. The charge for the work is around $5 an hour. Half hour sessions are generally recommended because the work is trying.

A great many women have a slight growth that is scarcely noticeable to other than their own penetrating eyes. Unless it is plainly visible and enough of a disfigurement to make you self-conscious and unhappy about it, let it alone. Just be careful to use no ointment containing either vaseline or lanolin, particularly the former, as they are both apt to produce a growth of hair. There are greaseless cold creams for cleansing purposes.

Answers to Inquiries.

GRACE: I WISH OTHERS WHO want to dye their hair could read your letter and know from you what a sad disappointment was your result. There is really nothing you can do to restore the color to your hair immediately. It will probably remain streaked for a while, but it will gradually come back to its natural color. Just take good care of it in the meantime. Shampoo it regularly. I shall be glad to send you my shampoo for blonde hair if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

* *

BROWN EYES: NO, I DON'T CONsider it vulgar to use an eyebrow pencil. On the contrary, it is quite an innocent aid to beauty and there is no reason why anyone with colorless brows cannot use one. But you must be skillful in its use. Vulgarity is in its unskilled application. Follow the line of the eyebrow. Take your mirror to a strong light and assure yourself you have not applied it too generously. I have a formula to promote the growth of the eyebrows and lashes which I shall be glad to send if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

HELEN: THE HALF CLOSED condition of your eye may be caused by the muscles in your eyelids being weak. I suggest your consulting an eye specialist about it. A girl five feet two inches at 15 should weigh 117 pounds. You are only twelve pounds under weight. You can build up your system by eating fat producing foods, getting plenty of fresh air, sleep and rest and guarding against constipation. I shall be glad to send you my instructions on how I increased Helene Barnett's weight twenty pounds in five weeks if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

WEEKLY PLANTING BULLETIN.

Sow or plant now in the garden: Chervil, midsummer [Icicle] radishes, early turnips.

Transplant now from the nursery bed or plant boughten seedling plants: Summer endive [tomorrow last chance], winter endive, kohlrabi [next Thursday last chance].

KEEP THE GROUND BUSY.

THE department of agriculture, in an appeal to American gardeners on farms and in the cities and suburbs, urges that every foot of ground be kept busy every day during the growing season. "Gardeners who neglect their plots in late summer and do not plant second crops," says the letter, "are unmindful of their own best interests and of their patriotic duty in helping to increase the country's food supplies.

"Seedsmen advise the department that there is sufficient seed available to provide for an extensive planting of fall gardens," the letter continues. "The problem is to escape the drought of midsummer and yet to mature the crops before the weather becomes cold enough to injure them.

"Special care should be taken in fitting the land for fall crops and the addition of a little quick acting fertilizer will hasten maturity. If the ground is dry at planting time it should be rolled or slightly packed over the seeds to insure an even start."

The above planting bulletin lists only such vegetables as can be sown or planted without risk. In THE TRIBUNE demonstration gardens, at Lincoln and Garfield parks and at the University of Chicago, we stretch the bounds of prudence somewhat in planting additional vegetables. As they are war gardens or emergency gardens, we are justified in incurring slightly greater risks there. A comparison with the previous Saturday's TRIBUNE will always show the risks there taken. Beyond that it is not advisable to go in this latitude.

The current number of the "Rose Annual," official organ of the American Rose society, gives a symposium of the views of seventeen prominent, patriotic Americans on the question, "Shall we grow roses in wartime?"

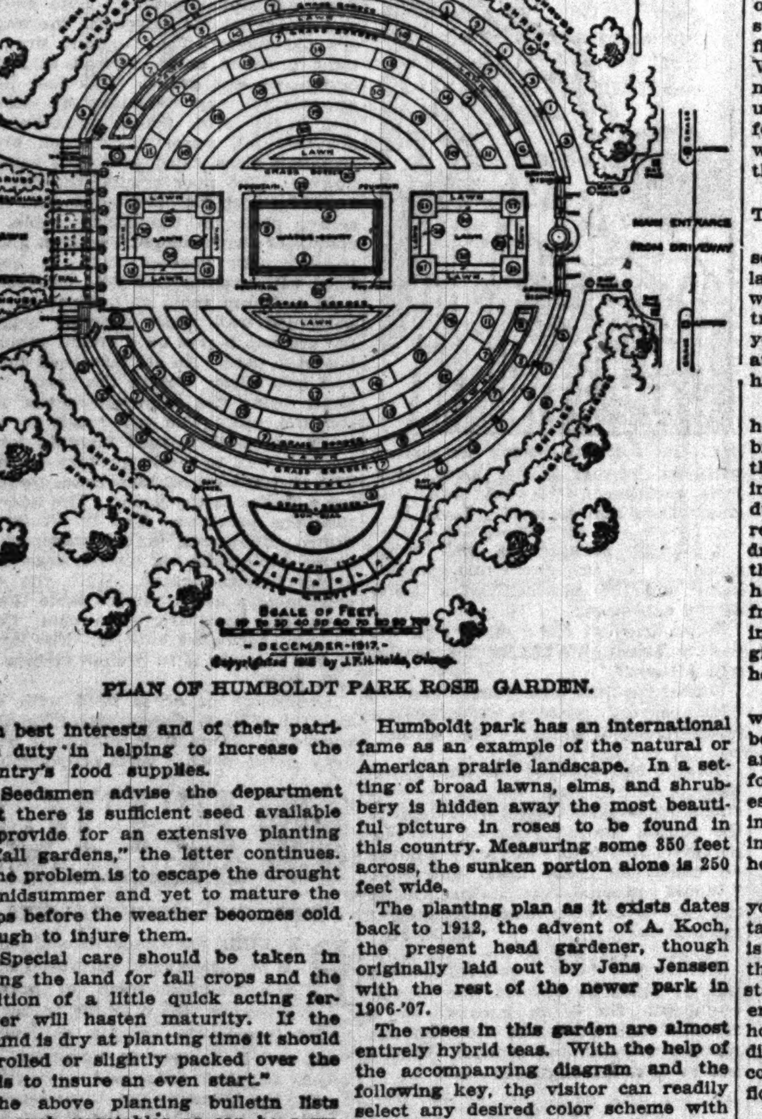
There is not a negative reply. Mrs. Edward W. Biddle of Carlisle and Philadelphia, one of the foremost of the intellectual women of our time, thus sums up the answer: "Mercifully there are roses to be cultivated while we read of torpedoes and machine guns, of submarines and Zeppelins!"

As a matter of fact, no human being can continuously concentrate on the horrors of modern warfare without some humanizing influence. Relaxation is necessary that we may not become madmen. The ennobling influence of flowers and flower shows is needed to preserve civilization through such an upheaval of the human race.

Every rose is beautiful, and there are immense gardens of them in Chicago, particularly in the west side parks. The wide expanse of flowers east of the lily pond in Douglas park contains 5,550 roses alone. This lies in an ill favored part of the second smoke zone and only two varieties have been found to resist the combined attacks of sulphur fumes, diseases, and insects—Mme. Caroline Testout and Pink Killarney. The latter is by no means entirely resistant, but Mr. Koch has been unable to find a better.

The garden in Garfield park is somewhat better situated and there the 4,000 roses contain six varieties.

The atmosphere is kinder to Humboldt park and there we find twenty-nine varieties among the 6,980 roses of the sunken garden, besides 5,000 prairie roses densely planted for mass effect in the general landscape scheme.



PLAN OF HUMBOLDT PARK ROSE GARDEN.

Humboldt park has an international fame as an example of the natural or American prairie landscape. In a setting of broad lawns, elms, and shrubbery is hidden away the most beautiful picture in roses to be found in this country. Measuring some 350 feet across, the sunken portion alone is 250 feet wide.

The planting plan as it exists dates back to 1912, the advent of A. Koch, the present head gardener, though originally laid out by Jens Jenssen with the rest of the newer park in 1906-'07.

The roses in this garden are almost entirely hybrid teas. With the help of the accompanying diagram and the following key, the visitor can readily select any desired color scheme with the assurance that every variety chosen will be adapted to local conditions. The numerals in parentheses refer to the corresponding numbers on the diagram; the other numerals in the key denote the number of plants used of each variety—6,980 roses alone:

(1)—12 Flower of Fairfield roses on six terra cotta urns. (2)—12 Lady Gay roses on six terra cotta urns. (3)—Adam's Needles [Yucca filamentosa] and Madonna lilies. (4) Border of Adam's Needles and summer annuals. (5) Massed Periwinkles on slope. (6)—100 Erna Teschendorff. (7)—1,080 Gruss an Teplitz. (8)—100 Sunburst. (9)—100 Baby Rambler. (10)—300 Mme. Edouard Herriott. (11)—200 Anna de Diesbach. (12)—480 General MacArthur. (13)—100 Paul Neyron. (14)—480 Mevrouw Dora van Tets. (15)—300 Ulrich Brunner. (16)—200 Etoile de France. (17)—400 Jonkheer J. L. Mock. (18)—400 General Superior Arnold Janssen. (19)—1,000 Pink Killarney. (20)—783 Mme. Caroline Testout. (21)—200 Mrs. John Laing. (22)—Border of Ageratum, var. Stella Gurney. (23)—2 American Pillar. (24)—4 Crimson Rambler. (25)—2 Tausendschon. (26)—225 standard roses, now in only seven varieties, interplanted with 500 Hermosas, numerous Madonna lilies, and summer annuals.

GIRLS WORTH FIGHTING FOR.

AT a dance given by one of the clubs in town a girl in the early twenties approached a stalwart young jackie with her head bowed down in a coy and kittenish attitude. Close up she shot burlesques on coquettish glances at him, gave herself a few affected little twists of her figure, and said: "My name is Teeny. What is your—your pet name, I mean?" The poor youngster in the uniform looked embarrassed to death for just one minute, then made one wild dash for two pals at the end of the room.

"These boys are so bashful," giggled Teeny. "They're so amusing."

She wouldn't have thought they were so amusing if she had heard the guffaws from their healthy young throats when the escaped one imitated her introduction. But they were right. Can't you hear your young brother reciting an incident like that for the benefit of his companions?

On the other hand, would you ever hear a word of criticism from young brother's lips were a girl at one of these entertainments to go up to him in a frank, wholesome way and introduce herself or open up a conversation relevant to the time and place? Hundreds of this latter type are extending the welcome hand to any number of homesick, lonely young chaps away from home for the first time and longing for nothing so much as to meet girls like their sister's chums back home.

It isn't a patronizing girl or one who will shed her ordinary well mannered behavior for something unbecoming and ridiculous whom the boy in uniform wants to know. It's the good, honest, fun loving girl with a merry smile in her eye that sends the blues chasing when the boy begins to think of home and mother.

That these boys are no different from your own nice brother, whose natural taste is for the clean and wholesome, is vouched for in a thousand ways. At the Soldiers' and Sailors' club, for instance, last week end, 6,000 boys came enthusiastically in response to the homes listed and open to them. And disappointment was keen when the discovery was made there was an overflow of them.

It's the home atmosphere and the homey folks they crave. And it's the women and girls who are supplying this who are supplying the best fighting material the Hun will ever be up against.

Of such are the young women of the north shore suburb who formed the Good Comrade club, an organization that deserves universal adoption. The purpose of the club is to create a wholesome, patriotic atmosphere among the young women who are attending the parties for the soldiers and sailors at the Highland Park club and the Episcopal parish house.

Under the direction of the War Recreation board the club will carry on its work, and members must sign pledges of conduct that will send these men away to the fight with the conviction that the women are with them and back of them and worth making sacrifice for.

Statistics on dance hall attendance by uniformed men proves that where sixty and seventy boys would be present some months ago on a Saturday night, three or four now is the more likely number.

Since the men crave the normal and wholesome in recreation and in girls and the Good Comrade club is an idea so tremendously worth emulating, why not inspire your church organization, your particular social organization, or your club to launch it and without delay?

Never Balked at Any Job.

When the first Liberty loan was called for my boy had $100 which he had earned and deposited in a bank. He immediately arranged to turn the whole amount into a Liberty bond.

As he is a Boy Scout, he sold first and second Liberty bonds (the Scouts in our town did not handle the third bonds), and has received the war medal and bar, of which he is proud. Then the war savings stamps came along, and as a Scout he is selling those and also earning some for himself.

He has done errands, mowed lawns, helped women clean house, turned washing machines, shoveled snow all winter—in fact, he has never balked at any kind of work he has been asked to do, and now he has fifteen of the $5 stamps on his own card, all earned outside of school hours.

He has now gone into the country to work on a farm all summer, and is planning on buying another Liberty bond when the fourth loan is called for with his summer wages, and also intends to fill his war savings stamp card before the year is over.

If more boys would put their earnings into war funds, instead of thoughtlessly spending so many dimes, they would soon have something to feel proud of.

Joins Land Army.

Three war jobs have come my way, one as a dietitian in a hospital in London, one with a college motor unit, and one as a telephone operator and interpreter in France. I wanted to take each one as it came along, but I always knew of some one who could do the thing better than I, but didn't know how to go about getting a job, so I turned over my chances.

It is silly and selfish to keep somebody useful away just because you want to see the sights. The three girls who are in the places I might have had are doing brilliant, steady work, much better than I could have done, because they were prepared.

But I am going to be prepared some day. I am taking some stiff courses in agriculture and botany, and working as undergrauates should work and don't, and in two weeks I go to a women's land army farm to get practical experience. Next summer I shall organize the women in my community and cultivate the waste land thereabouts.

While I am here in school I eat the war rations without grumbling, cut out candy and sundaes, and make surgical dressings for five hours a week. By knitting while the meals are being served, I have made five pairs of socks since Christmas, and I am not a swift knitter either. One can tuck an awful lot of work into the spare moments, and the time that is wasted in thinking about doing a thing—getting up in the morning, for instance—is surprising.

NAVY CALLS FOR NURSES.

FOLLOWING up my article of last week about the training schools for army nurses to be established throughout the country, I would like to remind the women who are considering entering the service as nurses that the navy is now in need of and is calling for nurses for military and public service.

Surgeon General Braisted has made the following statement in regard to this service:

> Never before in history has there been such a great opportunity for the nursing profession to come forward and render the greatest service possible to mankind in the caring for sick and wounded. A large number of nurses will be required not only immediately but for some time after the war has ended, to restore to health, comfort, and usefulness the maimed and injured who have suffered because of the enormous struggle now being waged in Europe.
>
> The nursing profession of the country is called upon in the same way as is the medical profession, to render the utmost service of which it is capable.
>
> Trained personnel is necessary for success. It is not only the duty, but also mandatory, that every trained nurse who is capable of serving should come forward at this time and take up that part of the burden which is hers.
>
> Several thousand nurses are needed to wait upon the personnel of the navy at the large naval hospitals in this country, as well as several naval base hospitals in European waters. Unless the personnel of the navy receives adequate medical and nursing attention the control of the seas must suffer. I therefore urge all the women nurses of training and experience who are physically and professionally capable of rendering service to come forward and enroll for duty. Preliminary enrollment has been placed in the hands of the American Red Cross. Under congressional law officers of the navy are authorized to accept civil assistance from this great humanitarian organization which has to date so capably fulfilled its purpose.

We have had our Liberty loan campaigns, food and fuel conservation campaigns, war savings stamp drives, and countless other war activity campaigns. Now the public is urged to start a "save a nurse" campaign, which is to discourage employment of individual nurses for single patients, except in serious cases. Wherever possible, those in need of nursing attention are asked to apply to hospitals or call on the visiting nurses.

This appeal for nurses for the navy follows directly the call for army nurses. Both branches of the service have designated the Red Cross as a recruiting or enrolling agency for military nurses who are eligible for war service.

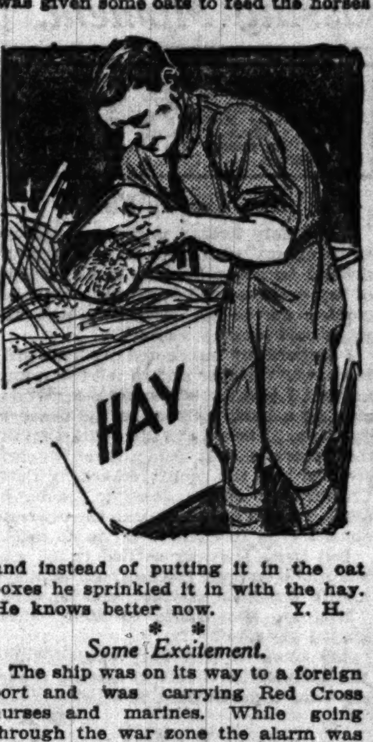
Married nurses and others who have, for one reason or another, given up their profession are asked to return to practice, or to give some time each week to a hospital or visiting nurses' association, or to help in diet kitchens, dispensaries, or other public health conservation activities.

This appeal is also directed to the graduates of high schools and colleges to enroll themselves as student nurses in some military or civil hospital, and thereby release graduate nurses for service with the army or navy.

Camp Stories Contest.

Your son, your brother, your husband, or your sweetheart in the service undoubtedly has told you some amusing incident that has occurred in his camp. Undoubtedly, too, there are ever so many stories originating in camp that are still untold. This contest is especially open to the soldier himself if he has a good camp story to tell. It is open also to every one who has been told a good camp story of actual happening. "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address Camp Stories Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Seasoning the Hay.



One fellow, when at Camp Grant, was given some oats to feed the horses and instead of putting it in the oat boxes he sprinkled it in with the hay. He knows better now.

Some Excitement.

The ship was on its way to a foreign port and was carrying Red Cross nurses and marines. While going through the war zone the alarm was given that they were being chased by a submarine. From a nurse's room came unearthly screams for help. Two sailors and an officer rushed to the rescue, but on reaching her room they found she had adjusted a life preserver she had brought with her, and it was so large she was unable to leave her room. In the excitement a sailor stuck a knife into it, which caused such an explosion she fainted. On reaching port they found the alarm was given merely for a drill.

Never Dressed Up Much.

"What size trousers do you wear?" asked a supply sergeant of a recruit.

"Well, I'll tell you," was the answer, "I don't recollect, 'cause it's been down around four years since I wore anything 'cept overalls."

C. T. F.

He Blew In.

A rooky of the Kansas rural type was in his first pangs of military training. In executing a squad movement one morning, he turned and marched in the opposite direction from the other recruits. His mind roaming on the green fields and fertile valleys at home, he failed to hear the calls of the drillmaster to return to ranks. Finally the drillmaster went after him and said rather sharply, "What are you doing out here?" To which the rudely awakened lad replied, "I was drafted, sir."

One of the Hind Feet.

A bunch of recruits were out drilling one day and one in particular was having a hard time trying to keep in step. The sergeant in charge was getting pretty sore because he had to keep telling the recruit that he was out of step, so finally after several attempts to get in step the recruit said: "Which foot is out of step, sergeant?"

Tommy's Only Souvenir.

A British Tommy, home on leave from France, was asked if he had brought any souvenirs. Tommy at once produced an old door knob and said it was the only souvenir:

"Why, how's that?" inquired an astonished listener."

"You see, it's like this," Tommy explained. "I was going into a small French cottage during a bombardment, and I just had my hand on the door knob when a blooming shell came along and took the house away with it, leaving this door knob in my hand."

Prefers Something Certain.

A captain at Camp Custer was cautioning his men in the rifle pits about misfires. "We don't want any accidents here," he said, whereupon a long, lean Kentuckian looked up and drawled, "Gawd no, captain. If I'm going to be killed in this war I don't want to be killed in no accident."

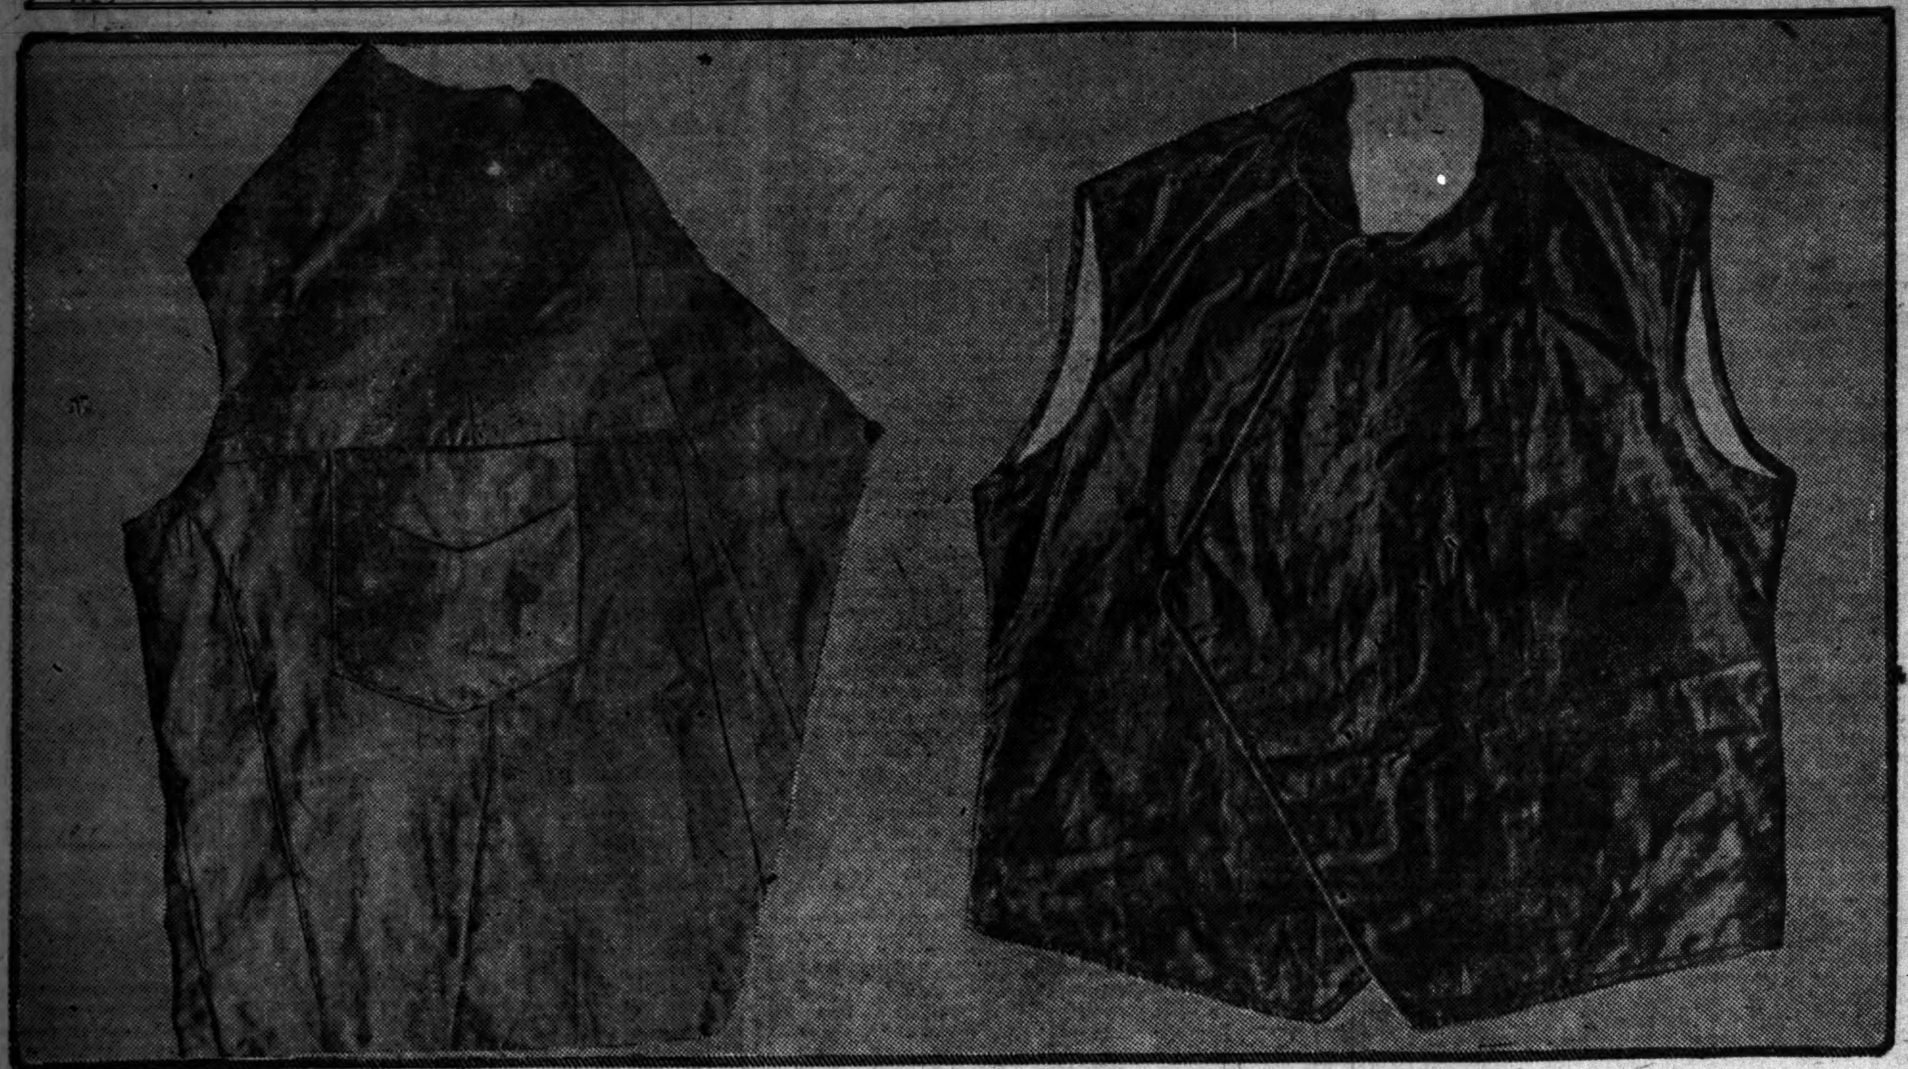
PATRIOTIC and PRACTICAL NEEDLEWORK by Clotilde



THE KID GLOVE VEST.

Probably the best reason for printing directions again for this vest is found in the statement quoted from a letter sent to Mrs. Russell Tyson of the American Fund for French Wounded by one of our boys over there. He writes:

"It is the most valuable article of clothing I possess. It is so warm and snug that by wearing it I can dispense with three or four sweaters, keep just as warm, and be far more comfortable."

Though he does not say it, the vest, too, has another quality which ranks it by itself. The cooties, those pests of the trenches, find lodging in the ribs of a sweater, but find no foothold on the smooth surface of the kid glove lining. So for this reason if no other the men should be supplied with the vests as rapidly as possible. The cooties, one remembers, carry trench fever, the most dreaded lesser disease of the army. Give your men garments proof against their attacks and reap your reward in the renewed strength of Uncle Sam's forces.

Long white kid gloves are best to use, but all kinds may be used. It is advisable to have the gloves cleaned before sewing them into the vest. Soiled kid is not attractive.

Open the gloves along the side seam, lay them on a lining of unbleached muslin, lapping the edges, and stitch flat on the sewing machine. Cut the kid and muslin interlining from the pattern, using the same pattern for the dark sateen outer cover. If preferred the whole jacket may be lined with flannel in addition, in which case the kid lining is used as interlining. The vest may be bound with braid or crosscut sateen. Bind from the inside.

The vest is sewed together by seams under the armpits. The length in front measures nineteen and a half inches; length in back, twenty-two inches. Length of seam under armpits, eleven inches. Length of shoulder, six and a quarter inches. Neck is rounded at the front. Armhole eight inches deep. The vest is sleeveless. Back twenty-two and a quarter inches wide. Width across the shoulders sixteen and a half inches. Across neck at back seven inches.

The single breasted coat measures twenty-six inches across the chest. The double breasted would measure more, as it extends across the chest as illustrated in the picture. For an average sized vest about two yards of material are required.

Patterns for the vest may be secured by sending 10 cents in stamps, and a stamped, addressed envelope to the American Fund for French Wounded, 60 East Washington street, Chicago.

Under the Fence.

One evening a girl friend and I were taking a walk in the country. On the way we passed some fenced in timber land and I wanted to stop and pick some wild flowers that were growing there. My friend did not want to crawl through the barbed wire fence, but said she would on slowly. I crawled through and picked the flowers, and when I started to crawl out one of the barbs caught in my waist. I couldn't free myself and my friend had walked on. I called, but while waiting for her a young man drove by who seemed to be much amused at my predicament.

Useless to Explain.

A few months ago the wife of one of my husband's best customers was paying me a formal call. I am only a bride and being small look much younger than I really am, and she is an older woman who really almost scares me to death. But I was doing my best to appear old and married and really flattered myself that I was making an impression. But just when we were getting along fairly well two women came and asked if I would show them my apartment, as they could not get in the one upstairs that is for rent.

Of course I let them in and showed them through, and when they were leaving one of them said to me: "Thank you so much, my dear, for letting me see the apartment, and tell your mother (nodding toward my caller) that I think it is so sweet."

Well of course my guest had heard it all, so when I went back to her I thought I would try and smooth it over. What I meant to say was that I looked much too old to be her daughter, but what I did say was: "They certainly did not take a good look at you. I am sure you look much too old to be my mother."

There was no use trying to explain that, and it certainly was my most embarrassing moment. X.

One Left Out.

I had been out with a friend several times that month before I decided to give a party. I could only set places for twelve, so I left her out. The refreshments were half over when the door bell rang and my friend arrived to call. It is difficult to tell whether my friend or I was the most embarrassed.

Much on Her Mind.

One day I went to the store to purchase some groceries. My mind was so occupied that when my turn came to be waited on I asked for a pound of eggs. The grocer looked at me and smiled. Thinking that he did not hear what I said I repeated it again, loud enough for every one to hear. Just then I noticed my mistake and I looked around to see every one laughing at me. I lost no time in getting out of the store.

On a Lengthy Visit.

I had only twenty minutes in which to catch my train and was scurrying around in great haste. In the midst of my excitement I spied my neighbor coming across the lawn and who always paid lengthy visits.

I desperately instructed my little girl to answer the door and to tell the woman that I was not at home, meanwhile making a hasty retreat to the nearest bedroom. I heard the little girl deliver the message, but when the woman stepped into the room, remarking that I would not go far, leaving the baby alone, I could only sink into the nearest chair trying to think what to do next.

But little Dorothy settled it for me when she stepped to the chamber door and in the most distinct whisper said, "Mamma, she wants to wait; what shall I say now?"

My chagrin was only exceeded by the humiliation I felt in having made my baby a participant of deceit.

All Seats Taken—and Kept.

While on a homeward journey in a crowded car after a day at the office, I glanced over the top of my paper and merely glimpsed from the corner of my eye, a woman loaded down with bundles and carrying a baby.

Every seat in the car was occupied and I was conscious that the woman hung on a strap by my side, her many bundles hanging at all angles from the crook of her arm.

I buried my face in my newspaper, as did every other man in the car, and continued my journey.

As I neared my destination I folded my paper and prepared to leave the car.

"Daddy, daddy," called a child's voice in my ear. I glanced up. There stood my wife with our baby and the result of a heavy afternoon's shopping in her arms.

Joe on the Wire.

I was madly in love and engaged to Josephine (Joe, for short), but our parents refused to consent to our marrying; said we were too young, and did not know our own minds; insinuated I was not able to support myself; forbade our engagement, and would not allow us to see or write to each other.

We decided to elope. I secured a job as telegraph operator in a small village. I called up her home number and said, "Is this Joe?" and far away a voice answered, "Yes, this is Joe." Quickly I told her of my job, and assured her that general managers and presidents of railroads always got their start in life as telegraph operators; I told her I would make all the arrangements, get the license, and she should meet me and we would be married that night.

Breathlessly I waited for her answer, when the far-away voice, cold and hard, said, "Soon as you are president or general manager of the road, come around, and I will get the license for you myself." The receiver clicked and I remembered that her father also answered to the name of Joe. L. A. C.

Joke on Mother.

Mother expected me to come home about 8 o'clock one evening. Soon after that time the door bell rang, and she, thinking I was trying to play a joke on her, called out, "You can stay where you are." To her embarrassment, she found that it was the minister's wife who had come to call.

Just to Quiet Matters.

A group of boys and girls, including myself, were at a picnic last summer. The girls started to tease me about one of the boys and he became peeved at it. Just to quiet matters a little I said: "O George, I know you like me." Well, to my embarrassment he replied: "Gee, you have a good opinion of yourself."

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are

Ambitious.

If your birthday falls during the week beginning today you are still one of Leo's children. [July 21-Aug. 21.] This sign is of the element fire and of fixed quality.

You Leo individuals are proud, passionate, ambitious, masterful, honorable, irrepressible, delighting in all that is really big in life.

You have a discriminating mind, and are a keen, subtle, powerful reasoner, but more through intuition than intellect. You can be secretive and conceal your thoughts and intentions, so that no words or expression of face will reveal them.

You are destined to climb to high places through sheer force of personality alone. Your magnetism and good natured daring will carry you far over the heads of your more plodding neighbors.

The birthright of you Leo people is a goodly share of physical beauty and you are fortunate in that you retain your youth well toward the end of life. You are courageous to the extreme limit, but under some circumstances you can slink back into the jungle, baffled, but not defeated. You will be heard from again later on, though, for, man or woman, you cannot be pushed out of the question. You are there to stick.

You can be intensely wordly, but only for a time, for there is something deep down in your nature that draws you strongly upward. You have an impulsive nature. You have a strong love of justice with marked religious inclinations. You are fond of dress and really tasteful finery and you know how to dress yourself and your children. You can make a neat and tasty wardrobe from the contents of some people's ragbags. And, after all, with all your neatness, cleanliness, and regard for appearance, some conditions, especially continual disappointments and discouragements, may drive you to a slovenly carelessness, which is distasteful to you, but which a certain tired feeling or inertia—the result of conditions that weigh you down—may render permanent.

If not a scholar, you have a forceful, deep, ingenious way of carrying conviction with you and strongly swaying people's minds, although your influence over them may not last long after they pass out and away from the sphere of that influence. You can stand some flattery and approbation if it is genuine and you know that it is, but you are apt to be suspicious. You have a vein of morose, gloomy humor, and say amusing things, and there is a certain causticity about your wit that hurts. Learn to be sincere always.

If you are a true protégé of Leo it will be possible for you to win success in the theatrical world. You excel as organizers, leaders, managers, or foremen. Many social welfare workers are found among you, especially women. You do not like manual labor and usually do better in a professional rather than in a business career.

Many authorities say you will find marital happiness with one born in Aries, March 22-April 20, or with Sagittarius, Nov. 23-Dec. 22. But all agree in saying you should not marry until you are sure of your heart.

Smile Your Sweetest.

"Dear Miss Blake: We are two girls of 13 years. What should we say when being introduced to a boy? Is it right to go to a party with a boy whom you have always known and who is very nice, if your parents do not object?

"POOTS AND CRACKER."

Say "How do you do?" and smile sweetly. That's all. If a lot of people were going whom you know and the party was at the house of some one of your parents' friends who would chaperon it properly, it would be all right to go, but no kisses! That's wrong.

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped, addressed envelope.

Boat Riding with Boys.

"Dear Miss Blake: We are two girls, 13 and 14 years old. Do you think it is right to go boat riding with two fellows we like very well, and also do you think it is all right to kiss a boy at a party and to kiss him good night when he takes us home? B."

No, I don't think girls of 13 and 14 should go boat riding with boys unless it is in a party that has the sanction of your parents or else one of your parents accompanies you on the ride. As for kissing boys, I hope you children would not be guilty of making yourself so cheap in their eyes.

* *

Kissing When Calling.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl of 15. One night a friend and I were coming home with two boys about the same age and the question arose of whether or not a boy should have the privilege of hugging and kissing a girl when he came to call on her. We girls held it was absolutely improper, but they took the opposite point of view. Do you think that they did that to see if we were weak minded enough to let any boys change our minds, or that they really thought it perfectly proper? Do you think, as the boys said, we girls are prudish? I would like very much to find your answer in the paper.

It's pretty hard to tell just what was in the minds of the young men, but it is my private opinion that no boy who has had any kind of home training can conscientiously believe it his privilege to hug and kiss a girl when he comes to call on her. Stick to the opposite point of view! You are right. And if the boys had any idea that you would submit to their familiarities, they understand now that that is not your idea of a good time.

* *

No Chaperon Necessary.

"Dear Miss Blake: Is it proper for a young girl to visit some people she has never seen, but has written to their daughter several times? We have been introduced through letters by my fiancé. They have invited me to come to visit them this summer. Would it be proper to go unchaperoned?

ROSE."

It would be perfectly proper for you to visit the people who have extended you an invitation. Since you are visiting the daughter of the house, the chaperon would be quite unnecessary.

* *

Trying to Be Popular.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl of 17, and I am considered good looking by many of my friends, but somehow or other I cannot make any boy friends. All my girl friends go out to dances with the boys and have a good time. I am rather shy and self conscious. Could you tell me a way to overcome it? I try to make myself agreeable and the boys seem to like me all right, but when it comes to dances and other little parties I'm not in it. I have plenty of girl friends. I would be much obliged if you would print this, as I am getting anxious.

WORRIED."

Worried, the secret of your trouble is your bashfulness, undoubtedly. A boy likes to feel at ease with a girl and if you are self-conscious, you cannot inspire this feeling. If you could take dancing lessons and become proficient in the art, that would help you to overcome your self-consciousness at parties, at least, because if you are a good dancer that is a big thing in your favor. Besides, it would give you more chance to know the boys. Study the ways that popular girls have and emulate them, always remaining the nice, wholesome girl I know you are.

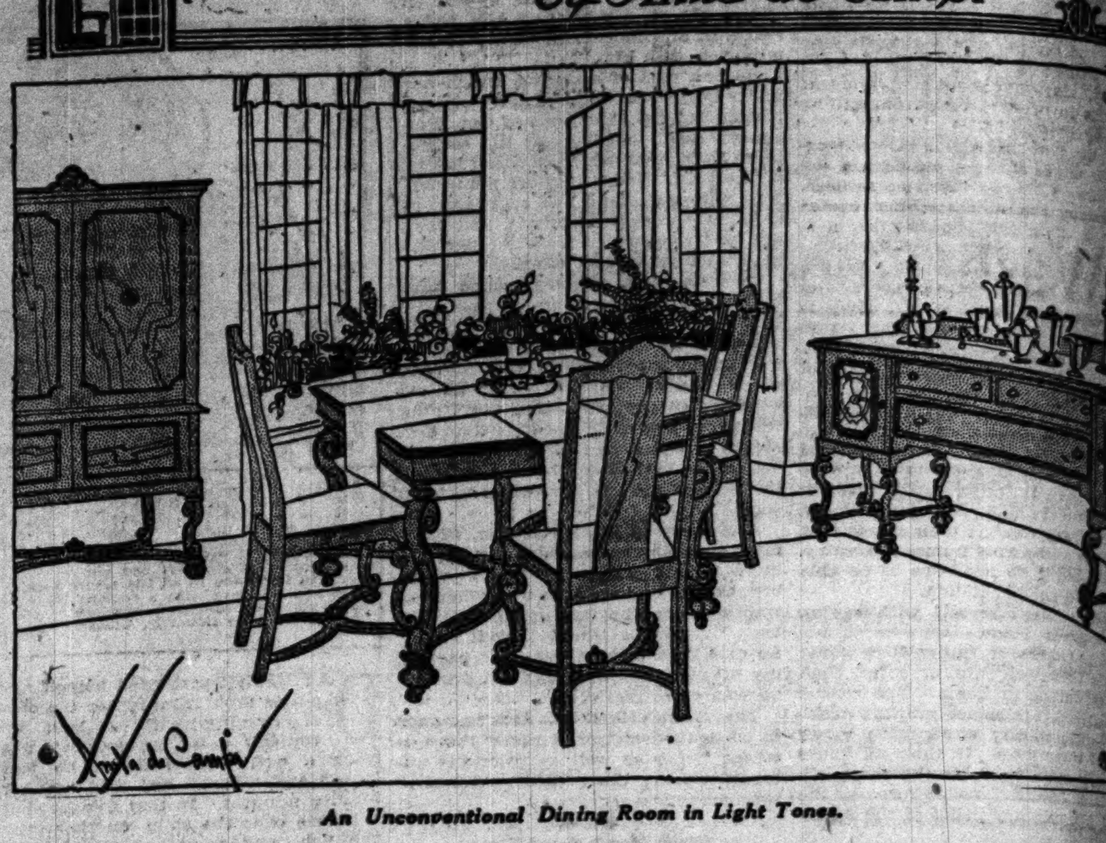
The HOME HARMONIOUS

by Anita de Campi



An Unconventional Dining Room in Light Tones.

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

Though families of two or even three maintain that the exigencies of their domestic life do not require a room to be used solely for the serving of meals, larger families find that the stereotyped dining room with the regulation center table and six chair equipment is quite essential.

If the rules were written for the furnishing of the conventional dining room, the first would probably be "clear the way." There is a cheery neatness about exposed surfaces, that is of floors as well as walls and sideboard tops, etc., and what every one wants is cheeriness.

Among the dismal horrors that have been banished are the dark tones. Woodwork is old ivory enameled where it was formerly "fumed," and walls are either paneled and light tinted or gaily papered with pleasant patterned paper. Scenic papers, particularly those in light, misty grays, are having wide vogue. Rugs and draperies used with them are usually in light, clear colors but unfigured. Amber silk gauze, or soft old rose, or old blue or willow green are all nice for window draperies with taupe or other neutral carpets. The order that floors should be darker than walls continues to be the accepted formula.

Some new furniture in Italian walnut is being shown. It is remarkably lovely in color tone. The tint is indescribable. It is far lighter than American walnut, but little darker indeed than the wood known as golden oak, but the texture is infinitely finer than the later wood. The gracefulness of form will be best judged by referring to the illustration, that shows in detail the modeling of the legs and under runners.

A dining room fitted with this furniture is unique in coloring. The chair seats are upholstered in vivid coffee and cream colored haircloth. The walls are old ivory. The curtains are of light mustard color, figured in mulberry and leaf green. The floor has an oriental rug repeating all other tints in the room. On the mantel shelf are two tall vases of peacock blue Venetian glass, filled with pale yellow flowers. The floor around the rug is stained a deep mulberry color, and the center piece on the dining table, a chalice of straw colored Venetian glass banded with peacock blue, is kept filled with multicolored field flowers.

In a dining room of quaint charm, patterned wall paper showing bright flowers and leaves on a cream ground has been used. An old fashioned chair rail goes clear around the room, the paper being the same above and below the rail. The woodwork is old ivory and a tiny wood molding joins the side wall to the light ivory ceiling. The curtains are of blue gauze matching a flower in the paper. The hearth tiles are also blue. The furniture in brown mahogany is composed of a round table with six slender legs and ladder backed chairs. With the exception of a small service table there is no other furniture in the room. Corner cupboards are built in. The large woven rag rug is in broken stripes of soft color.

Landscape paper is used with delightful effect in a most attractive dining room, where it is combined with gray grass cloth. Well proportioned spaces are divided off into panels by means of narrow wood moldings, and the largest of these panels are filled with the pictoral paper, while the remainder of the wall is grass cloth covered and merely "trimmed" with wood molding outlines.

The table, an unusually long, narrow one, has turned legs and slender footbars. It is not an extension table. Across its full length is a runner of Italian filet lace. The chairs have ladder backs, cunningly carved, and the seats are made of rushes.

The curtains are of gold colored gauze, and the seamless chenille rug, in golden faun color, has a wide border in a deeper tone of the same. The little lamp shades on the side wall candle brackets and on the center chandelier are of apple green silk, edged with a tiny cording of mauve.

Though center lights in rooms of small or medium size are considered incorrect, exception is made for the dining room. The center light here is fairly indispensable if light enough to eat by is allowed. Side lights are used as well. Five branch chandeliers are most desirable. Electric lamps directly on the table have been tried, but they are forever getting out of order, and, too, they hinder the sight of one's vis-a-vis.

I have seen an ugly center light cleverly masked by having a rather narrow, perfectly upright parchment shade encircling it. The parchment was a straight band adjusted at its upper and lower edges to two large wire hoops. The hoops were equal in size and the parchment, which was about the width of sash ribbon, was ornamented with painted flowers and trimmed top and bottom with narrow, inexpensive upholstery braid. The whole thing was suspended from the ceiling by four colored silk cords ending in long decorative silk tassels that fell over and below the parchment.

The flowers painted on the shade were copied from the floral pattern of the cretonne lambrequins at the windows. The cords were fastened to four tiny ceiling hooks. The center rod that held the ugly old fixture was wound around and around with silk cord matching that used to swing the shade.

This lighting mask has the advantage of being portable. The idea may be copied in decorative wallpaper or glazed chintz by any one to whom painting floral designs is out of the question. If glazed chintz is used it may be cut the right way of the goods, and the cords will cover the seams. The effect is almost the same as that of hand decorative parchment paper.

The colonial dining room is always gracious in style. In a colonial room the chief attraction may be a good painting, either a floral piece or an old family portrait inset above the mantelpiece. A simple display of Sheffield plate is permissible, as a "character touch." Let it be a touch, though, and nothing more. A lavish showing of silver and cut glass is properly accounted vulgar.

A silver tea set on a Sheffield tray and four Sheffield candlesticks with little apricot silk shades are lovely on a long colonial sideboard which is fitted into an arched recess in a fine room. The walls are just "off" white. The built-in cupboards have arched door tops and the four fold screen leading to the butler's pantry is in arch topped panels. The table and chairs are in brown mahogany with blue leather seats on the chairs. The inside curtains are of wistaria rep, and the whole daylight effect is vivified by chintz window shades, brilliantly colored with birds and flowers.

Good decorative use is made in another dining room of an aquarium. This in width and length exactly fits the surface of a broad window seat that extends across a group of three windows. A striking touch is given the aquarium by the use of jade beads that are irregularly strung apart on copper wires, and hanging down into the water from ornamented cork floaters. The beads are of different sizes and the gold fish swimming in and out among the odd little strings are remarkably pretty. The walls are painted pale jade, with thin voile glass curtains to match. A valence of deeper jade voile trimmed with copper gilt braid crosses the group of windows at the top. The floor covering is oriental, and the furniture of black lacquer. Two narrow moldings about a foot high up on the wall as an old style plate rail hold between them a series of square titles decorated in bright green and blue.

In the dining room where the plate rail has been removed all the wall surface below the old plate rail have been covered with painter's canvas, marked off into narrow upright panels with narrow wood molding, and then painted a light ivory. The ceiling has been calcimined a still lighter ivory, and the old ceiling beams have been ivory painted to match the rest of the wood. A tiny molding serves as finish, replacing the rail, and this molding is repeated at the juncture of ceiling and sidewall. Strips of wood the width of the ceiling have been placed upright between the horizontal moldings on the side walls, "tying" the beams to the wainscot. All above the wainscoting is papered with paper having delicately colored poppies and leaves on an ivory ground. Poppy pink is used for the inside curtains over lace net. The furniture is walnut and the carpet is sage green. The candle shades are light yellow silk, tinged slightly with green.

Answers to Inquiries.

MRS. J. M.: It is considered correct to dress the buffet quite formally with simple things. Chafing dishes, cut glass, etc., are kept put away. A pair or candle sticks, with a bowl for fruit or flowers between them, is enough. Use figured cretonne printed on a tan ground in your brown rooms. Have the portieres brown velour on one side and cretonne on the other.

* *

MRS. B. J. R.: A pale putty color would be best for side walls with your rug. Old ivory cotton rep draperies with cream voile curtains. Your yellow silk Rajah, if it is not too clear a yellow, will do. Dipping it in a weak solution of lavender dye would neutralize the yellow. Use amber silk for your lamp shade. Have the wall paper and draperies alike in the two rooms.

* *

F. S.: No special preparations were made. The calcimine [old ivory] was simply painted on the wood work and washed off at the expiration of the lease. It stayed on and looked well.

* *

J. A. McA.: Yes, keep to the color scheme of blue and French gray. You did not show how many "other rooms" and what sort.

ETIQUETTE

by ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER

WEDDING ANNIVERSARIES.

Because the atmosphere of today is permeated and saturated with the fragrant scent of orange blossoms there seems to be an added interest in wedding anniversaries; and in answer to numerous requests for their order and celebration, I offer the following list, those marked with an asterisk being the ones usually remembered:

*First, cotton; *second, paper; third, leather; fourth, fruit and flowers; *fifth, wooden; sixth, sugar; seventh, woolen; eighth, India rubber; ninth, willow; *tenth, tin; eleventh, steel; twelfth, silk and fine linen; thirteenth, lace; fourteenth, ivory; *fifteenth, crystal; *twentieth, china; *twenty-fifth, silver; *thirtieth, pearl; *fortieth, ruby; *fiftieth, gold; *seventy-fifth, diamond.

E. G.: The bridegroom provides the bouquets for the bride and her attendants (after due consultation with her as to the proper color and style). He also buys the ring and pays for the minister's conveyance to and from the church. The customary order for the bridal party, upon entering the church, is as follows: First, the minister takes his place (coming in from a small door near the chancel); the bridegroom and best man enter from the same door and stand at the right of the steps; then the ushers, bridesmaids, and the maid of honor walk up the aisle (in the given order), the ushers stationing themselves near the bridegroom, the bride's attendants forming a group opposite them. Last comes the bride on her father's left arm. She and the bridegroom remain in the center of the group, facing the minister. On leaving the altar the bride and bridegroom go first, followed by their attendants in couples; the best man and maid of honor, and then a bridesmaid and an usher.

Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply, inclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

* *

L. M. G.: For a week-end visit a young woman needs, besides her traveling clothes, only a sport outfit—gingham dress or white skirt and waist and gay sweater—and a simple organdie or voile frock for evening. Of course, she must be careful to bring the proper shoes, stockings, hats, and other accessories necessary for the two days, as no thoughtful guest borrows from her hostess. A gift to one's hostess is not essential, but a sincere, cordial, "bread and butter" letter should be sent her immediately after the visit.

* *

M. M. M.: Pink is the accepted color for a baby boy, blue for a baby girl, but almost invariably mothers make their choice according to their preferences.

* *

F. A. N.: If your parents approve, it is permissible for you to attend the fraternity dance with your young friend, provided the affair is well chaperoned and conducted in an irreproachable manner.

TODAY'S BEAUTY HINT

It is not necessary to shampoo your hair so frequently if it is entirely and properly cleansed each time by the use of a really good shampoo. The easiest to use and quickest drying shampoo that we can recommend to our readers is one that brings out all the natural beauty of the hair and may be enjoyed at very little expense, by dissolving a teaspoonful of Canthrox, which can be obtained from any druggist, in a cup of hot water. This makes a full cup of shampoo liquid, enough so it is easy to apply it to all the hair instead of just to the top of the head. This, when rubbed into the scalp and onto every strand of hair, chemically dissolves all impurities. It is very soothing and cooling in its action, as well as beneficial to both scalp and hair. After rinsing out the lather so created, you will find the scalp is fresh, clean and free from dandruff, while the hair dries quickly and evenly, developing a bright luster and a soft fluffiness that makes it seem very heavy.—Advertisement.

Mid-Summer Items of the Shows and Showmen

MR. KAUFMAN of the New York Times wires to say that the prevalent crusade against theater ticket agencies means nothing in the life of A. H. Woods, the presenter of "Friendly Enemies." Seats for that popular drama in New York are hard to get because it is a good show and because its owner, Mr. Woods, believes that good spenders should have good seats at a theater, just as good spenders should have good clothes at a tailor's or good eaters should have good "eats" in a restaurant. The brokers have bought 502 places indefinitely on the lower floor of the Hudson theater, and they have also acquired the first three rows of the balcony, their expenditure involving some $60,000 or other. Mr. Woods should worry.

◆

"Fiddlers Three," an operetta with a Belgian prima donna who escaped the atrocities, will be produced Labor day by John Cort.

◆

When "The Kiss Burglar" arrives presently hereabouts Miss Fay Bainter will be absent from its cast. Among the deprivations common to the outlands, this is not the sorriest.

◆

Up in Boston the Henry Jewett Players, a well known stock organization in those parts, is encouraging the drama by offering a prize of $500 (plus the customary royalties, of course) for the best American play suitable for production by Mr. Jewett and his coworkers. In view of the many problems of the hour, argues Mr. Jewett, there ought to be any number of opportunities at present for the American author. But, of course, there is a catch in it. The contest is open to any one in New England.

◆

You recall, of course, the harmonious, though bizarre, noises made by the Six Brown Brothers, performing upon the saxophone in the Fred Stone show? War has made its inroads on that sonorous choir, for Vern and Cuthbert have joined the navy and are now scenting the battle from afar. Enlistments, however, will permit the sextette to appear in full numbers when, on Labor day, Mr. Stone begins an engagement at the Colonial in "Jack o' Lantern."

◆

It is whispered around and about Dearborn and Randolph streets that one of the subsidiary "Friendly Enemies" casts will be led by Lew Fields and Joe Weber. Those beguiling slapstickers of a past generation are regarded by Mr. Woods as still possessing the essential punch, and though their latest effort to "come back" has been futile, he thinks that they may, abetted by the Stars and Stripes, be able to make good. London is hungry for American plays, and the worse they are the better the English like them. Weber and Fields, "Friendly Enemies," and London seem to be an inevitable combination. They'd like "Why Marry" or "The Knife" in that perplexing capital.

◆

Oliver Morosco, the canny Californian, will on Sept. 2 in New York present "One of Us," a drama by Jack Lait and Jo Swirling. Mr. Lait is The Tribune's new O. Henry and Mr. Swirling has, in his time, performed as night police reporter for the same gazette.

◆

Mr. Morosco also is on the rim of a play entitled "Watch Your Neighbors," which involves the British secret service, some German spies, and a comely American heroine. It has been performed recently in Los Angeles, where it was said to be good. Leon Gordon and Le Roy Clemens, both actors, are the authors of it.

◆

"A Tailor Made Man," boasting the prestige of many successful months in New York City, will reach Cohan's Grand Opera house Sept. 1, with Grant Mitchell in the title rôle.

◆

Orme Caldara, strange to say, has been employed for a leading rôle in "Information, Please," the new drama by the Misses Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, authors of "Lilac Time," in which Miss Cowl is soon to appear in New York. Henry Stephenson will also be in it.

◆

Miss Dorothy Klewer, who used to skate skilfully but unnoted on the ice at the College Inn, has become a New York actress. After a spectacular period in the plays of Raymond Hitchcock, Miss Klewer has been engaged for a rôle in the Shuberts' "The Blue Pearl."

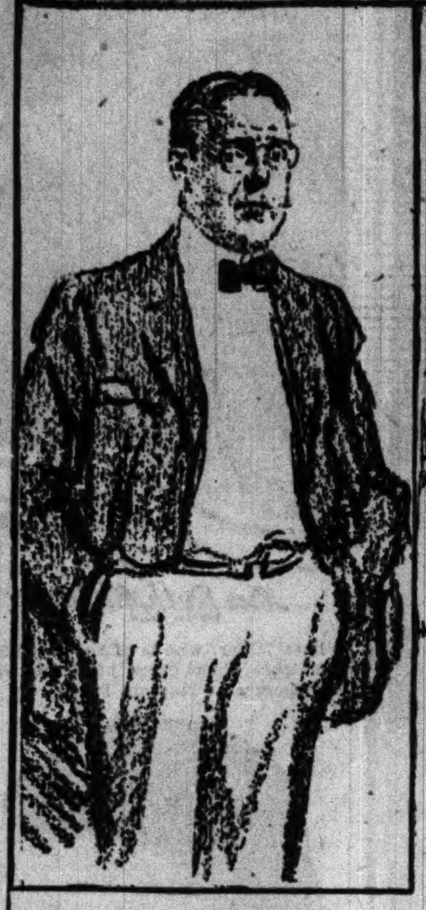
◆

Cyril Maude has employed Miss Annie Hughes and William Devereaux to act with him next season, in case there is a next season, in "The Saving Grace," by Haddon Chambers.

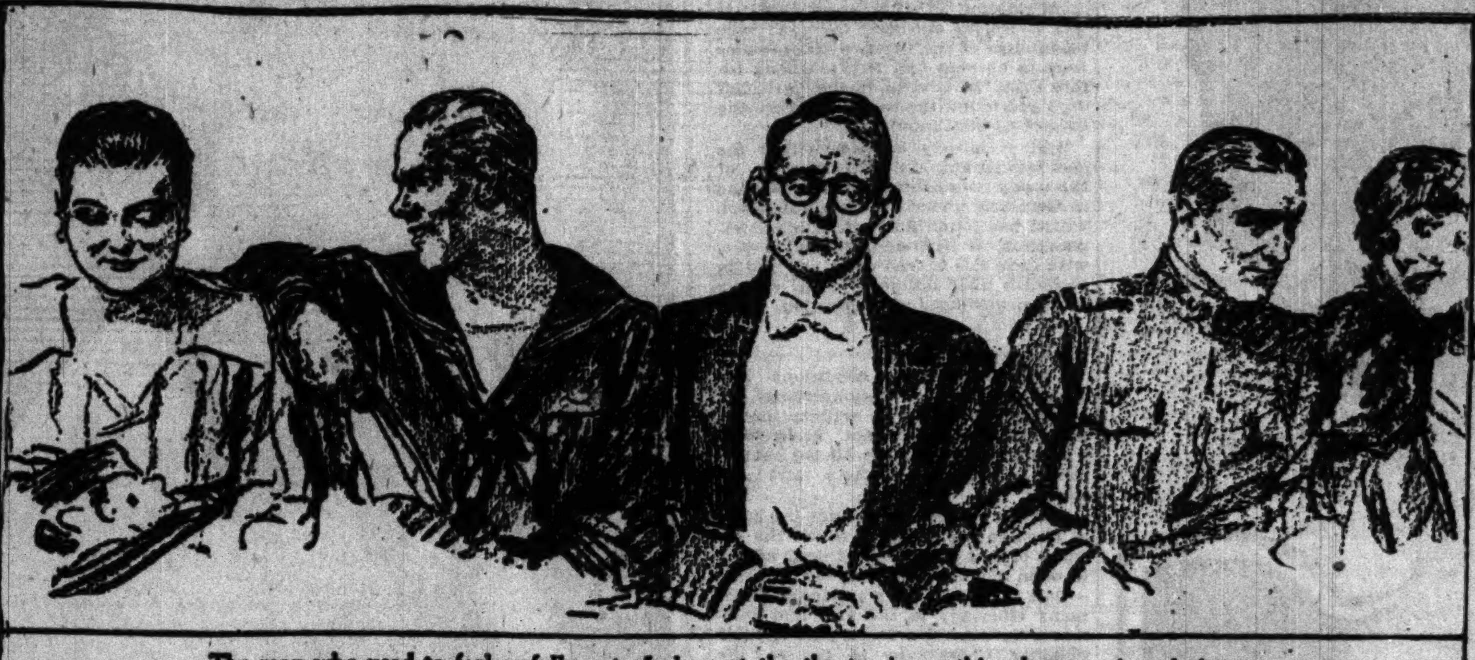
AMONG US MORTALS

THINGS THAT FOUR YEARS OF WAR HAVE CHANGED

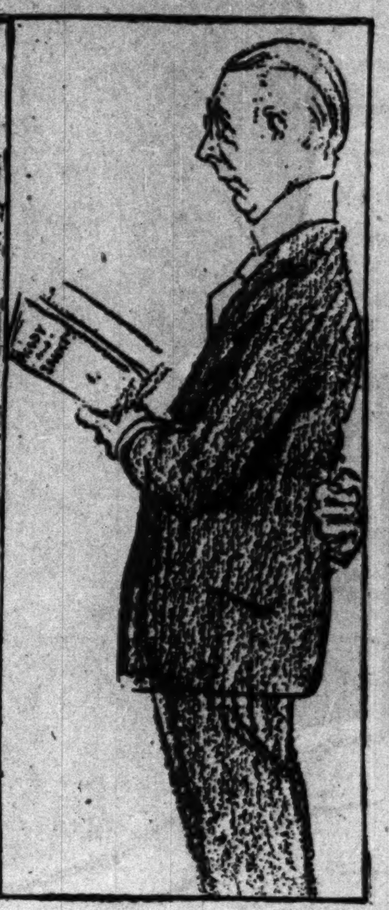
By W. E. HILL



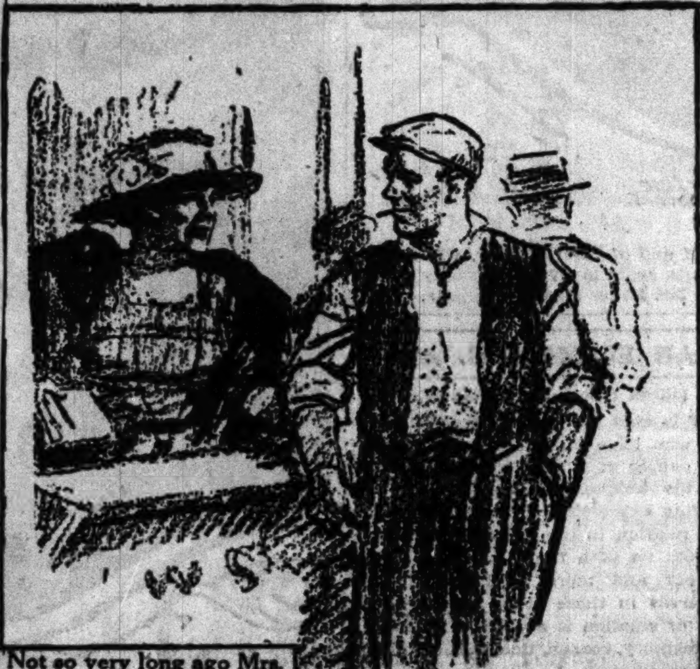
The man who was considered a leading authority on the war in 1914. He was caught in France when the war broke out, and "prophesied six months' duration at most."



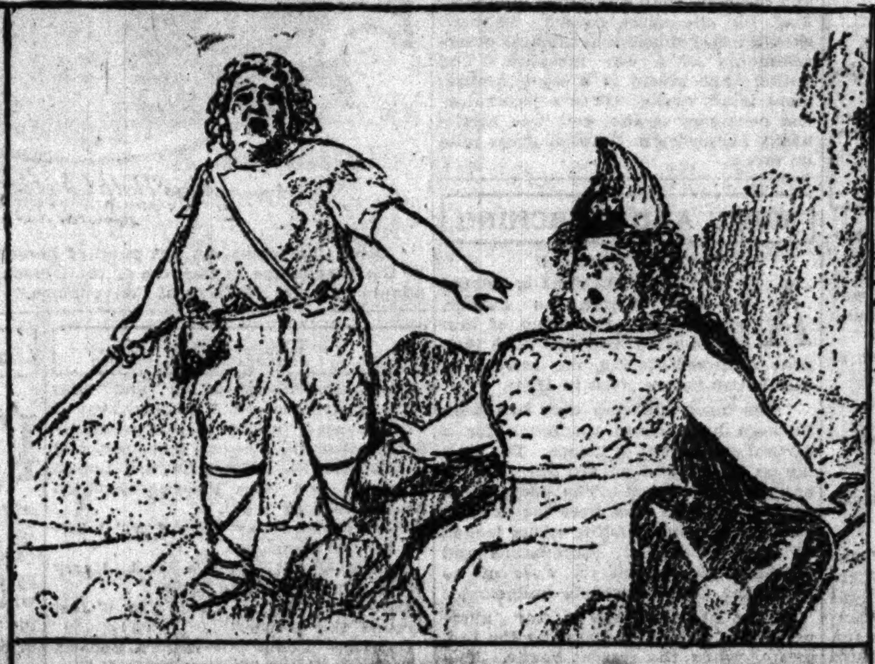
The man who used to feel awfully out of place at the theatre in anything but evening clothes.



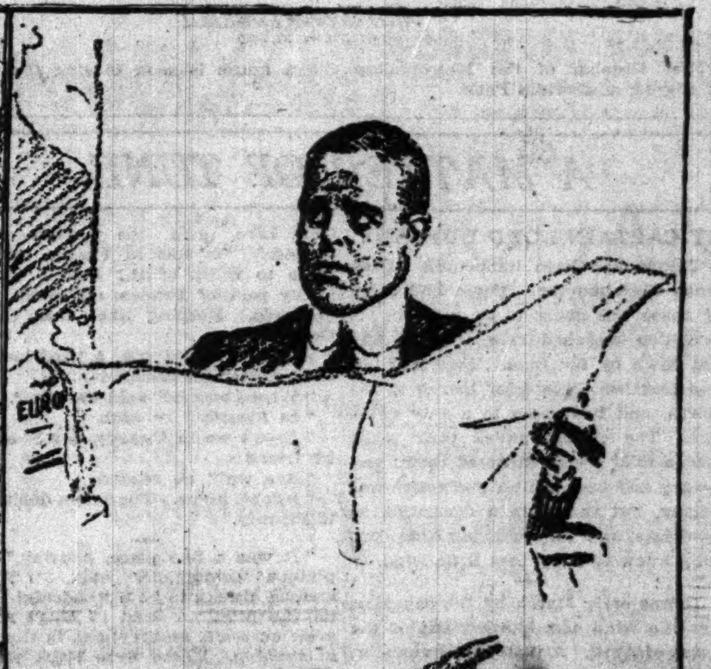
Our pre-war idea of the Y. M. C. A. secretary has been altered of late.



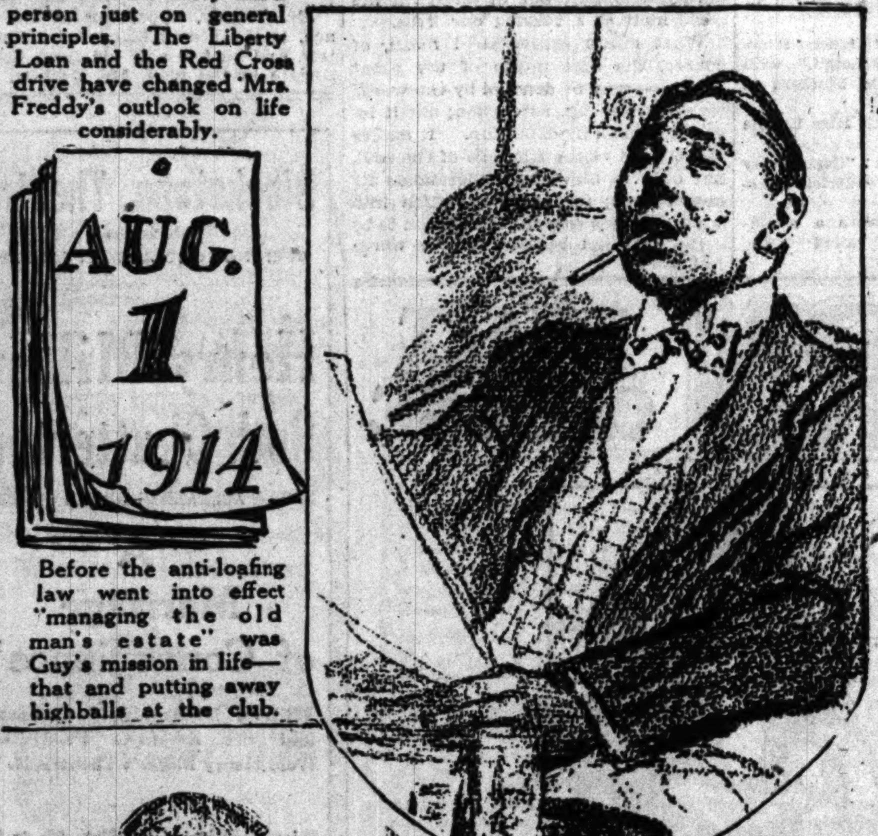
Not so very long ago Mrs. Freddy Smithe-Smythe's blue blood would have led her to cut every third person just on general principles. The Liberty Loan and the Red Cross drive have changed Mrs. Freddy's outlook on life considerably.



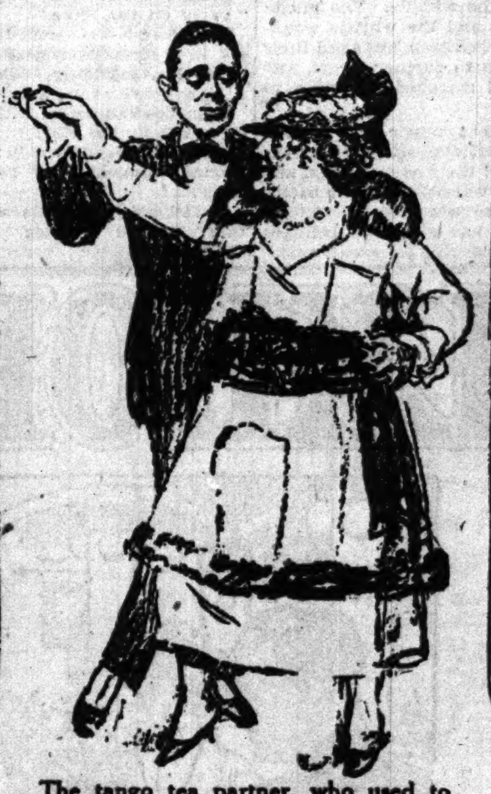
Gone are the German operas, with the three hundred pound Brunnhildes and Siegfrieds.



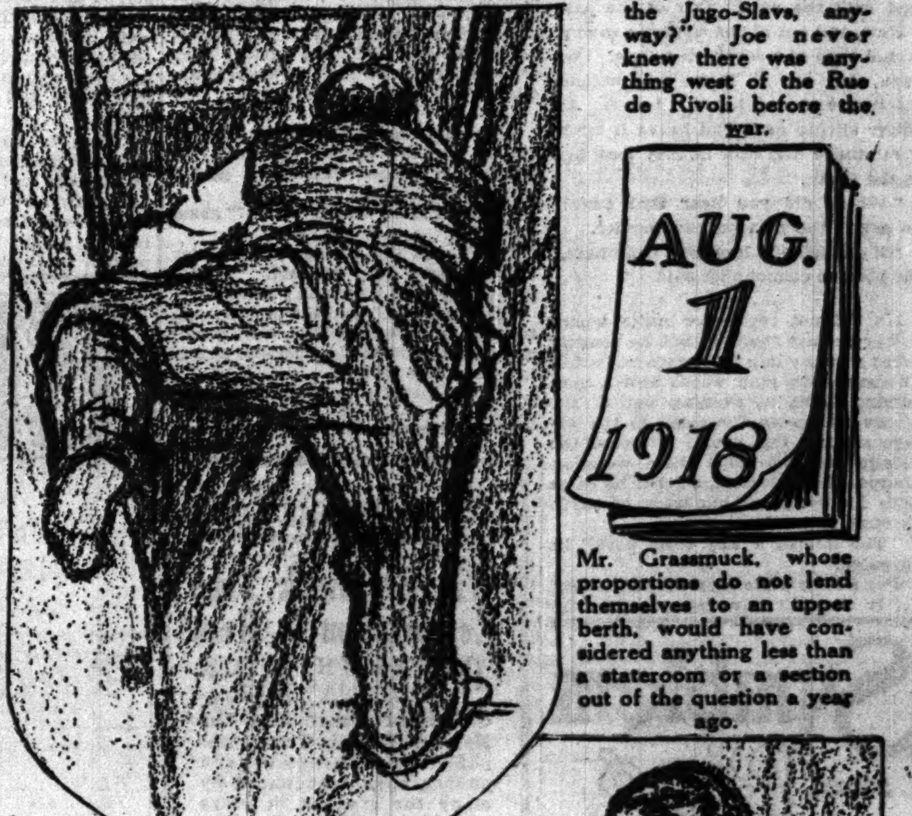
"Say, where'n 'ell are the Jugo-Slavs, anyway?" Joe never knew there was anything west of the Rue de Rivoli before the war.



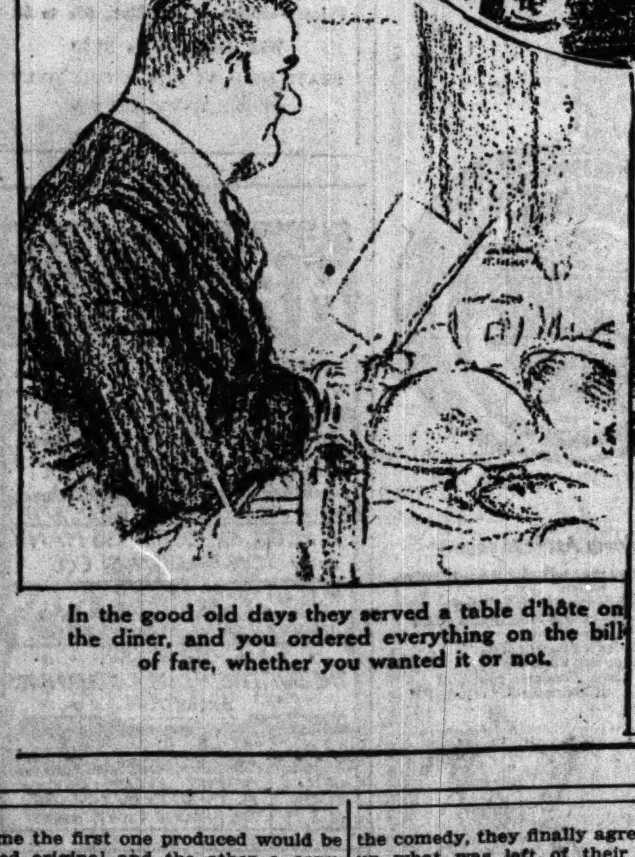
Before the anti-loafing law went into effect "managing the old man's estate" was Guy's mission in life—that and putting away highballs at the club.



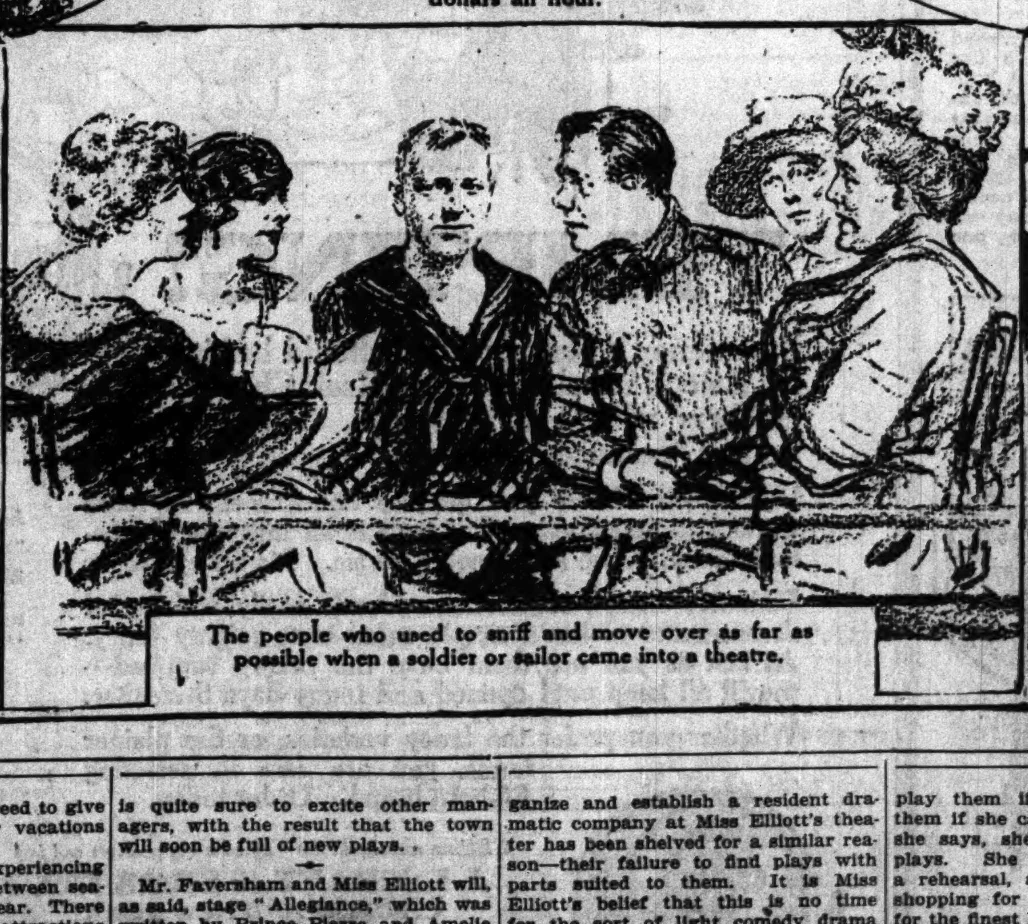
The tango tea partner, who used to give the old girls a treat at four dollars an hour.



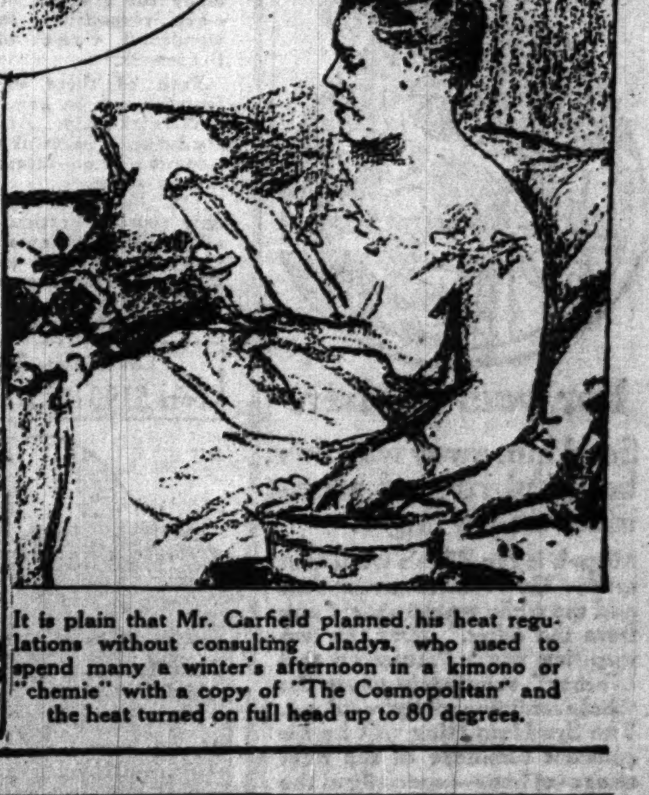
Mr. Grassmuck, whose proportions do not lend themselves to an upper berth, would have considered anything less than a stateroom or a section out of the question a year ago.



In the good old days they served a table d'hôte on the diner, and you ordered everything on the bill of fare, whether you wanted it or not.



The people who used to sniff and move over as far as possible when a soldier or sailor came into a theatre.



It is plain that Mr. Garfield planned his heat regulations without consulting Gladys, who used to spend many a winter's afternoon in a kimono or "chemie" with a copy of "The Cosmopolitan" and the heat turned on full head up to 80 degrees.

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—When Winthrop Ames and E. H. Sothern returned from their tour of the camps back of the line in France and reported that a great need of the American soldiers over there was entertainment that would take their minds off themselves and put them in touch again with the homeland, there was an immediate and hearty response on the part of the players.

A great massmeeting was held in the Palace theater, attended by 2,000 men and women of the stage. Mr. Ames made an impressively eloquent appeal for volunteers and practically the entire audience arose and declared its willingness to start that minute.

That was last spring. The summer months were ahead of the players, and a vacation devoted to patriotic services including the inspiring experience of crossing the ocean to the battlefields of a world war, was rather inviting. The Overseas Theater league was organized, headquarters established in the Little theater, and the job of recruiting players, assembling them into units of four and five each and arranging for their passports and transportation was begun.

Then the arrangements began to clog. Among other things the government, not realizing that more marriages are made in vaudeville than in heaven, decided that the rule with respect to married couples and persons with relatives actively engaged on the other side applied to the actors. It took months to drive an exception through this bit of foolish legislation. Then the call for men came and the rush of soldiers took up all the available boat room. After which the Germans decided to do a bit of submarining on this side of the world, and the volunteer players' enthusiasm began to ooze. Finally along came July, filled with rehearsals for August openings, and the Overseas Theater league ceased to be embarrassed by the number of offers it received from those so eager at first to go. Particularly was this true of the players of prominence, for during the time they had waited for a chance to go over they quite naturally had gone ahead with their plans for the immediate future, and many of them are now unavailable.

As a result American soldiers in France are not likely to see many of their old favorites during the fall and winter. Some few, however, have patriotically held themselves in readiness to go on call, Irene Franklin and Burton Green among them. These popular vaudevillians are playing a farewell engagement in vaudeville this week and expect to sail before it is completed. For three months they will live in their suitcases and travel in such conveyances as the quartermaster's department can provide. As employés of the government they will be paid $2 a day each and they will sacrifice of course the three months' work on this side which would have netted them several thousands. Tony Hunting and Corinne Francis, also of the varieties, will be members of the same unit.

A rumor that so far has not been denied attaches Josef Urban's name to a Shubert contract, Mr. Urban agreeing to confine his activities as a scenic artist and stage decorator hereafter to productions staged by that firm.

Urban has had much to do with revolutionizing the appearance of New York stages the last five or six seasons. He previously did a similar service for the productions of the Boston Opera company, but none of the local managers paid much attention to him until George Tyler commissioned him to build the very expensive setting for "The Garden of Paradise." This was the production that put the Liebler company into bankruptcy because, according to the criticism of the time, the scenery was so much more attractive than the story the play was lost.

Scenery that could be depended upon to fill in the gaps of a weak entertainment was exactly what Florenz Ziegfeld was looking for. He immediately signed a long term contract with Urban and for three or four years the artist's principal annual contribution to the stage has been the gorgeous settings he has provided for the "Follies" and the miniature duplicates used in the Ziegfeld midnight shows, though he also has done a few of the Klaw & Erlanger music play settings. No figures are mentioned in the matter of the Shubert offer, but they probably represent more money than Urban, starting modestly as an architect in Vienna, ever dreamed would be coming his way.

◆

Maude Adams, home from her tour and eager to do something for the soldiers, visited one of the nearby cantonments last week and consulted with the amusement director as to the character of entertainment the boys most enjoyed. The director agreed that they seemed to like most everything that was half way entertaining, but admitted that they liked some things much better than others. To illustrate which point he told of the experience of a very fine and very temperamental pianist who recently offered to play for the lads. He gave them a bit of Chopin and a little Debussy, and was about to throw in a slice by Bach when he became conscious of a considerable movement in the auditorium. He could not see clearly across the footlights, but, being used to the annoyance caused by late comers, and noting that the aisles were filled, he stopped playing and waited. When the shuffling did not stop, he walked over to the manager of the Liberty theater, standing in the wings, and protested: "If those boys don't stop coming in I shall be unable to continue," he said. "That's all right, mister," replied the manager; "they're not coming in; they're going out." Miss Adams will probably not include a concert pianist in her unit. She has neither confirmed nor denied, as the reporters say, the report that while in Los Angeles she was offered a half million dollars if she would pose for a screen version of "Peter Pan."

◆

Some indiscreet person last week whispered into the ear of A. H. Woods that the play which William Faversham and Maxine Elliott are jointly to produce at the Maxine Elliott theater in August, called "Allegiance," deals with the same theme of loyalty to an adopted country that inspired the writing of "Friendly Enemies," which, with Louis Mann and Samuel Bernard, Mr. Woods was preparing to present in New York about the same time. This was Thursday morning. Thursday afternoon the manager called his comedians together and laid the rumor before them. If it were true, he contended, that the plays were similar in theme the first one produced would be called original and the other a copy. And no one in New York would know that "Friendly Enemies" had been playing the better part of the winter in Chicago, or remember it if they did know it. Therefore he proposed getting the jump on the Faversham-Elliott combination by opening in July. Mr. Bernard and Mr. Mann sputtered a bit, but being interested in the profits of the comedy, they finally agreed to give up what was left of their vacations and go back to work.

As a result New York is experiencing the novelty of having no between season pause in its theatrical year. There are still fourteen regular attractions playing in the Broadway theaters, with two midnight shows to top them off. The arrival of "Friendly Enemies" and "The Passing Show" this week is quite sure to excite other managers, with the result that the town will soon be full of new plays.

◆

Mr. Faversham and Miss Elliott will, as said, stage "Allegiance," which was written by Prince Pierre and Amelie Rives Troubetskoy, but neither will have a part in it, probably because there are no parts to which either is suited. Their original plan to organize and establish a resident dramatic company at Miss Elliott's theater has been shelved for a similar reason—their failure to find plays with parts suited to them. It is Miss Elliott's belief that this is no time for the sort of light comedy drama she formerly played, but rather a time for plays of vision, and plays with messages for a troubled and upset world. Finding any such she will play them if she can, or produce them if she can't. Her greatest joy, she says, she now finds in staging plays. She loves every minute of a rehearsal, and she had rather go shopping for stage furnishings than for the finest lace. After seeing "Allegiance" well under way she has gone to Saranac Lake for a few weeks, returning in time for dress rehearsals and the first performance, scheduled for mid-August. She will not return to England until after the war. Letters from there last week told her of her sister Gertrude's preparations for her London appearance in "Eyes of Youth" in the fall and of her distinguished brother-in-law, Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson, learing a new part in a sketch Barrie has written for a war benefit.

A MATTER OF TUNE

BY CAPTAIN LORD DUNSANY.

Things had been happening. Divisions were moving. There had been, or there was going to be, a stunt. A battalion marched over the hill and sat down by the road. They had left the trenches three days' march to the north, and had come to a new country. The officers pulled their maps out; a mild breeze fluttered them; yesterday had been winter and today was spring, but spring in a desolation so complete and far reaching that you only knew of it by that little wind.

It was early March by the calendar; but the wind was blowing out of the gates of April. A platoon commander, feeling that mild wind blowing, forgot his map and began to whistle a tune that suddenly came to him out of the past with the wind. Out of the past it blew, and out of the south—a merry, vernal tune of a southern people. Perhaps only one of those that noticed the tune had ever heard it before. An officer sitting near had heard it sung: it reminded him of a holiday long ago in the south.

"Where did you hear that tune?" he asked the platoon commander.

"O! the hell of a long way from here," the platoon commander said.

He did not remember quite where it was he had heard it; but he remembered a sunny day in France and a hill all dark with pine woods and a man coming down at evening out of the woods and down the slope to the village singing this song. Between the village and the slope there were orchards, all in blossom, so that he came with his song for hundreds of yards through orchards.

"The hell of a way from here!" he repeated.

For a long while then they sat silent.

"It mightn't have been so very far from here," said the platoon commander. "It was in France, now I come to think of it. But it was a lovely part of France, all woods and orchards. Nothing like this, thank God!"

"Where was it?" said the other.

"In Picardy," he said.

"Aren't we in Picardy now?" asked his friend.

"Are we?" he replied.

"I don't know. The maps don't call it Picardy."

"It was a fine place, anyway," the platoon commander said. "There seemed always to be a wonderful light on the hills. A kind of short grass grew on them, and it shone in the sun at evening. There were black woods above it. A man used to come out of them singing at evening."

He looked wearily round at the brown desolation of weeds. As far as the two officers could see there was nothing but brown weeds and bits of brown barbed wire. He turned from the desolate scene back to his reminiscences.

"He came singing through the orchards into the village," he said. "A quaint old place with queer gables, called Ville-en-Bois."

"Do you know where we are?" asked the other.

"No," said the platoon commander.

"I thought not," he said. "Hadn't you better take a look at the map?"

"I suppose so," said the platoon commander, and he smoothed out his map and wearily got to the business of finding out where he was.

"Good Lord!" he said. "Ville-en-Bois!"

Music and Morale

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

THAT music is a source of inspiration and strength, of resolution and mental activity as well as physical, has not been doubted for a very long time. The fact has passed into proverbs of one sort or another. Modern growth in orchestration is far from being the earliest manifestation of this knowledge. It was centuries ago that the first rude beginnings of the German Männerchor were to be seen and felt; and long before them the Greeks, in their greatest day, had found the secret. Before the Greeks it was known.

Still, it is only of late—within the last few months, in fact—that any of the many commentators on conditions in Germany under blockade and deprivation has found that music is the explanation of how and why a people, with little else to feed upon, can and do replenish their failing stock of energy at musical founts of inspiration.

One of these writes:

"While the food conditions and others are so very disconcerting, the musical field shows an activity that is marvelous. One cannot understand where these people get all the money they spend on concerts and the operas."

Another commentator finds the basis of German "efficiency," which the enemies of that country are free to admit, to be in music, and insists—and proves—that those who have builded for Germany efficiency in the arts and commerce have made music a part of their building. "Germany is, per se," he writes, "a nation of efficiency and thrift. If music were only a pastime, Germany, of all nations, and before any nation, would be first to condemn it. But Germany, as a matter of fact, is fostering this art more and more. She knows the weariness, suffering, and strain of the people, and gives them music."

He claims that music is doing more to maintain German morale, civilian and military, than any other influence. And, for the same reason, we here should foster music and musical entertainments as a war measure. The notion that music is a mere amusement is all wrong. It is a psychological necessary of life; and it is particularly necessary in times of great public stress.

MUSIC AND MARCHING

[From the Musician.]

AN interesting incident is related by Owen Wister, the author, which shows the effect of music on tired soldiers. The incident occurred during the retreat of the British before Mons in 1914:

"The heavy fighting they had been through had proved too much for a certain contingent of troops. The men lay on the ground, played out, indifferent, and benumbed. The enemy was coming; but the men were too tired to care. Their commanding officer looked at them in despair. Commands and entreaties to march on were of no avail; the men refused to budge.

"Near at hand was a toy shop, which had been abandoned by the proprietor when the retreat began. The officer made for the shop, and a moment later appeared with a toy drum and a tin whistle. Then, while he played the drum, two soldiers took turns playing the whistle. The music from the drum and the whistle awakened the benumbed men, stiffened their legs and spirits to further effort, and they arose and marched ten miles to safety.

"That is what music did in one case. In the medieval age the Romans and Greeks had their battle songs, and even now our warriors sing in battle. It has helped to win many a victory. Indeed, music has played a brilliant part in the history of all great wars."

AN ELEMENTAL ART

[Efrem Zimbalist in the Musician.]

IT is only to the comparatively few who have labored long and assiduously at it that music stands as the unique, independent, and satisfying expression of the human soul. Its relation to life, though not so apparent as with the other arts, is far deeper and more fundamental; for, whereas in those other arts the feeling or emotion is evoked with the aid of memory, reason, imagination, music is the emotion.

Furthermore, its subject matter is the vast ocean of elemental feelings, hardly definable, but in all truth the basic motives actuating our lives.

What music expresses—I mean, of course, the best music of the great masters—may be denoted by the words love, sorrow, joy, aspiration; but it invariably loses by definition. It makes audible the vague stirrings of the soul, but only to him who understands its own speech; for any translation into familiar terms robs it of its reason to be—the art that appears where words fail.

BRITISH NOBILITY IN MOVIES.

By Mae Tinée.

THAT all the world, including the British nobility, is interested in the "movies," will be proved, David Wark Griffith tells me, when his latest picture, "The Great Love," is shown. He writes:

"It is a mater of common knowledge that the British government rendered me every assistance possible in making 'Hearts of the World.' In filming 'The Great Love' I was given help of a different nature.

"I wished this picture to present a number of England's best known women, but was a little doubtful as to just how they would view the matter. The fact that ten of the most noted court ladies, including Queen Alexandra herself, appear, proves my contention and Mr. Kipling's that we're all moving picture fans and related under the skin."

Mr. Griffith writes further:

"Lady Paget, who did so many kind things for me when I was in London, is the one who really started it, and at a suggestion from her, Lady Diana Manners fell in line and drew every one else with her." Lady Diana is one of the most popular young ladies of the court. She is also one of the most beautiful women on the British isle.

"I was introduced by Lady Paget one afternoon while visiting a hospital. Lady Diana was there, distributing gifts. She shook hands with me in American fashion, something else I did not expect. Then she smiled and said:

"'So this is the American cinema maker?' (The word moving picture is not in common use in England.)

"I admitted that such was my business.

"Lady Paget then broke the ice by stating that I had agreed to produce a film in America that would show the American people some of the things with which England had contended during her first year of the war, and suggested that Lady Diana help in the production.

"She thought the matter over for a moment, and then without any more hesitation stated that she would do all she could to aid the production.

"After that everything was easy, but few appointments necessary, and every one of these appointments kept to the letter.

"The ladies appeared to take the affair as quite a lark after hearing that it would be useful, for right now, in England, things must be useful if they are to be done.

"The queen mother readily consented to appear, and she is shown doing one of the things she likes most to do, visiting the wounded soldiers in the hospitals. She spends many hours cheering up the men who have been wounded and sent to England to recover.

"I expected to have some trouble in posing the people who had consented to appear in the picture, and there was a time that I did not know but it was a rash proceeding to try it. Again I was mistaken. When filming the scenes for the charity bazaar, not one of the ladies was hard to direct. They did just what was asked and showed a willingness I sometimes wish I could get from more people in the profession. They frankly stated that they knew nothing about it and would do as they were told.

The famous producer concludes his letter with the observation that if he had ever entertained the idea that the upper classes of England were composed of snobs he is a converted man.

The members of the girls' mother ambulance unit of Hightstown, N. J., have written Tom Moore, telling him they want nothing in the world of him but to adopt them. They state they need a motor ambulance "right now," but don't suppose he could give them one and that twenty of the girls are still without leather puttees, but they suppose they'll get them somehow. But all they want of Mr. Moore is a large autographed photograph for their drill room. Three guesses—will Thomas come across?

Little King Baggot and wee Julie Cruze have done a special film for the fuel administration. Both are 4 years old, with King four months younger than Julie. I'll say it ought to be some fillum!

Mme. Petrova declares that she achieved her life's ambition during her cross country tour in the interests of war savings stamps. She saw Charlie Chaplin make a scene in his coming picture, "Shoulder Arms!"

These stars are willing to sacrifice anything for their country! Madge Kennedy is even doing without a butler these days, the Goldwyn press agent affirms.

Lieut. Howett is still making the rounds of the Ascher brothers' theaters in the interests of the drafted man. He tells him just how to proceed and then answers questions put to him by his hearers. You ought to look him up if you've been called or are expecting the call.

I'll be so interested to see Carolina White in pictures—she's to be Caruso's leading woman, you know. Reason why? I interviewed her once when she was here singing in grand opera and liked her ever so much. She's a pretty thing!

A local motion picture company has had a call for 125 American comedies to entertain the Italian soldiers. May they send them comedies!

The pet of the Hayakawa studio, little Mary Jane Irving, is the proud possessor of ten war savings stamps bought her by the Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa.

You know that cutey faced Pauline Curley? Well, she's knitted no less than seventy-two sweaters for the soldiers. Seventy-two!

SLAMS OF LIFE.

By J. P. McEvoy.

"O POP-EYE, DEAR."

My child, it would not make me coise
If you would only be more choice
In picking men at whom to voice
In accents clear
Them words which make my heart rejoice;
"O Pop-Eye, dear!"

Perhaps they think that you allude
In this informal greeting crude
To how their optics may protrude—
But, no siree,
"Pop-Eye," of course, is your new pseud—
Onym for me.

O, how my buzzum boined with pride
When first my features you descried
And with precocious glee applied
This soubriquet.
But now on every man it's tried
Throughout the day.

The laundry boy is "Pop-Eye, dear,"
The men who bring the milk and beer,
And all the neighbors far and near
Are greeted thus.
Cut out that "Pop-Eye" stuff, you hear,
You little cuss?

Ask Me! Ask Me! Ask Me!

PESSIMISTIC PATSY: O, don't be afraid of hurting my feelings! You come right along and get it out of your system! Your letter was clever and to the point, and I'm inclined to think you're pessimistic in name only.

WRITER: I don't read scenarios. Tell you why—I wouldn't have time, and then I don't pretend to be any expert on the subject. It's a wise woman who realizes her limitations, wouldn't you say?

INKEY FINGUERS: O, baby, take a bath! Not that I know of. No, Marguerite Clayton is not related to Ethel. Won't the Sunday do?

FAIRBANKS FAN: No, Douglas hasn't enlisted. He is soon to serve his country, however, by making a propaganda picture. So far as I know his little son is not in the movies.

BLUE EYES: I think you would be a very silly child to go to any such school as you mention. I will not recommend anything of the kind. I don't always agree with the mothers, but I certainly do, with yours in this instance. Wash your face in cold water and breathe deep for five minutes. Maybe that will change your point of view.

X. Y. Z.: Marguerite Clark is with Famous Players, 130 West Fifty-sixth street, New York. I haven't read the books you mention, but Jean Webster's stories are pretty sure to be interesting. You're welcome.

E. S. R.: Lieut. Howett is not a movie actor. He is merely lecturing at some of the theaters in the interest of the government, instructing men who are in the draft how to proceed.

Wedding Customs Changed by War; Simplicity Rules

By Mme. X.

IN no direction has the war wrought a greater change than in the matter of marrying and giving in marriage, and our attitude toward this one of life's chief ceremonies. They seem far in the remote past, those old time, conventional weddings, when the bride, her trousseau, her wedding presents, her bridesmaids, the entertainments given for her, were the chief theme of society and society reporters for weeks before the marriage.

Then the bridegroom, unless he represented an excess amount of worldly goods, was as inconspicuous and negligible a factor in a wedding as a vermiform appendix in an operation for appendicitis. You couldn't have the operation without the appendix, nor the wedding without the bridegroom, but neither took any part in either before or after arrangements or ceremonies.

Although we in America always prided ourselves on the fact that parents had little to do with arranging marriages, that most marriages were love matches, and untainted by materialistic considerations, yet the fact is that, especially among the better to do classes, much of the old world point of view, that marriage is principally a business proposition, had crept into the prevailing way of thinking of it.

"Is she marrying well?" a common phrase, didn't mean is she marrying an honest, industrious, high souled young man, with a clean mind and body. It meant, is he able to provide her with the material comforts which had come to mean the beginning and end of life's desires?

* *

Changed Point of View.

In the twinkling of an eye this point of view changed. That flame of patriotism that swept the best of our young manhood into the service of the country, fired the hearts of our young women with combined admiration and love, and such a crop of so-called "war weddings" resulted as has never before occurred in our history. The mere sight of her suitor in Uncle Sam's uniform softens the heart of the most obdurate maiden.

It is the girls who are urging the short engagements, the quick marriages—not the men. War's uncertainties have broken down all the barriers custom had built up between a young woman and her lover.

Gentle and lovely Miss Ethel Forgan, who went to France in February a heart free young woman, and returns next month as Mrs. Vernon Booth Jr., a stricken widow, typified the attitude of the average American girl. Better a short married life, glorified by the heroism which lays its all—love, youth, hope, and life—on the altar of devotion to those principles for which this country is fighting, than either a long engagement or marriage with a multimillionaire snugly ensconced in some bulletproof job!

* *

Bridal Couple in French Service.

Of all these war marriages, which are restoring romance to our whilom prosaic world, there has been none more radiant with the undeniably exalted passion of these tremendous times than that of Miss Suzette Ryerson to Lieut. George Washington Patterson of the French Forty-second field artillery. Both are youthful Americans, best product of our country, who before we entered the war offered themselves to the service of France for love of the cause of human liberty, which was—and is—so cruelly menaced.

Miss Ryerson, young, beautiful, of a prominent and wealthy Chicago family, studied two years at the University of Chicago, so as to fit herself to go to some French military hospital as a bacteriologist—a much needed adjunct to every hospital. She overcame great difficulties after reaching France, but finally was accepted and for over a year has been giving her youth and strength in as arduous a service as can be imagined.

Besides the scientific part of her work she has been active in every department of practical nursing and wears the uniform of the French Red Cross nurse. She has been frequently under fire. The hospital with which she was connected was in the path of the big German drive in June. It was under heavy bombardment for many days, and when four shells struck it in one night, the order was given to evacuate it immediately.

* *

Move Wounded Under Fire.

At 3 o'clock in the morning the nurses, doctors, and orderlies moved the patients out on litters, placed them in camions marked with big red crosses, and started for the rear. Boches aviators, ill famed birds of prey, flew low down and raked the caravan of mercy with their machine guns, wounding many.

For three days those attending that outfit of "grands blessés" (seriously wounded) were on constant duty, never sleeping or taking off their clothes, but they got their charges to safety and comfort.

Miss Ryerson then went to her mother, Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, in Paris to rest, and to her came George Patterson, fresh from being graduated at the French military school at Fontainebleau, and said he had a week's leave in which to get married before having to join his regiment on the firing line.

He had gone to France with the American Y. M. C. A., but had sought more active service, and, failing acceptance in our army because of a heart not up to our army medical standard, had applied to and been accepted by the French. So he and Miss Ryerson were both wearing the livery of France.

Red Tape Precedes Ceremony.

The business of getting married is a complicated one in France. You have to have all sorts of official papers—your "dossier," it is called—giving the names of all your ancestors for several generations back, together with dates of birth, death, and marriage of these ancestors, and birth and baptismal certificates of every one connected with the marriage in question.

It took three active days for the contracting parties in this wedding to collect these documents, or their substitutes. But, breathless, the young couple and their witnesses met at the office of the mayor of the arrondissement (each arrondissement, or quarter, of Paris has a mayor) fully equipped with the required papers. They were ushered into a vast room which was hung with red velvet and adorned with a statue of "la Republique" and a French flag. An important looking individual, wearing a heavy gold chain about his neck, led them to their places, and seated them in large, red velvet arm chairs.

Then came the mayor wearing, though it was a bright Saturday morning, full evening dress with a tricolor ribbon across his chest. A clerk read aloud the names and professions and outlying relations of the contracting parties. Various articles of the code Napoleon on the respective duties of husbands and wives, were recited to them, and they were asked if they wished to undertake these responsibilities. On each replying, "Oui," they were pronounced husband and wife according to the French law.

Pays Tribute to Americans.

Then arose the mayor and said that he could not let the occasion go by without a word to mark its significance. He spoke of the beauty and idealism of America in that this young man preferred to leave the paths of literature and a quiet life of study and peace to become an officer in the French army, while this young woman, who, he said, "united science to grace and charm and loveliness, which is what all American women know so well how to do," had also forsaken the comfort and ease of her home to succor the wounded soldiers of France.

He paid a great tribute to the work of Americans among the French wounded, and then spoke of the critical time for France and for all the world (it was at one of the most serious moments of the great offensive), but that with America by her side France feared nothing, and, face to the enemy, was ready for all things. Concluding he said that when the young, newly wedded couple were at home again in peace and serenity, it would be the happiest remembrance of their lives to feel that they had come to France in the hour of her greatest peril and had, without thought of self or selfish interests, given her aid.

He ended by shaking hands with them and wishing them much happiness. It was all done with a simple dignity and sincerity most touching to the little group of Americans.

Week's Honeymoon in Brittany.

This civil ceremony was followed by a wedding breakfast with about a dozen of the bridal couple's fellow countrymen and workers present, after which the company walked around to the beautiful American church, in the Avenue de l'Alma, for the religious service. The bride carried a bouquet of white lilacs, blue delphinium, and crimson sweet peas—the colors of America and France.

The honeymoon—a week—was spent in Brittany, after which Lieut. Patterson joined his regiment and Mrs. Patterson returned to her hospital unit, which has established itself in a fresh position behind the lines. She is tall, dark haired, and starry eyed, with an exquisite complexion and a charming piquancy that harks back to her French great-grandfather. Mr. Patterson is rather fair, with fresh complexion, regular features, and is said to look extremely stunning in his horizon blue uniform.

One of the wedding guests was an American, Frederick Blakeman of New York, who had just won the "croix de guerre," with stars [a much coveted decoration] because he was one of that devoted body of fighting aviators who were sent by Gen. Foch to hold the Germans back until the French troops came up. Like avenging archangels, they flew low down over the enemy lines and threw bombs, and hand grenades, and sprayed them with machine gun bullets. They lost 50 per cent of their flyers, but they kept the Huns from passing.

Was there ever a wedding in times of peace to match such a one as this?

Used to Wartime Discomforts.

There is one thing that we stay-at-homes will probaly never be able to visualize, and that is the conditions of daily living of our friends and neighbors who have gone across the water to help our great allies. And yet these fellow citizens of ours in France have adapted themselves so completely to day and night bombardments, to the use of bread, meat, and sugar cards, to the hundred small discomforts of existence that they only refer to them in the most casual way in their home letters.

A prominent Chicagoan who recently arrived in London laments the fact that that those matchless strawberries for which England is so famous had all been commandeered by the British government to make jam for their soldiers and sailors, so civilians were only allowed to buy them once a week.

This same Chicagoan comments on the prolonged daylight in England, made more striking by the hour advance of the clock. As the hour for beginning of theatrical performances in London has also been hurried up from 8:30 to 7:30 p. m. [equivalent, by old time, to 6:30] one goes to the play by broad sunlight and finds prevailing daylight on coming out three hours later—the long June twilights of England being more than usually emphatic.

New Form of Entertaining.

Gone—or temporarily suspended—is the old formal entertaining which made London in the season the most brilliant and distinguished capital in the world. Not that people have given up social gatherings. They are as popular as ever. Returning officers and soldiers need the relaxation of theaters, restaurants, and other festivities. But the form has changed.

There has come to my desk an invitation which indicates this new order of things. It was sent out by a young hostess, member of a well known family, people of social standing and what the English would call "in the know." It invites the so-and-so's to a party on Friday, May 31, at 6:30 p. m., and announced that "contributions towards the supper will be thankfully received," while in the corner the card further informs the invitee that dancing and drinks will be provided.

We Americans are not up to our usual form or vigor in summer entertainments, and what gatherings there are of a general nature are all for some war relief or local philanthropy. There was a large and lovely garden party yesterday afternoon and evening on the fine old grounds of the Franklin P. Smiths' Lake Forest home. It was organized by Mmes. Frank R. Fuller, Arthur Chase Dow, Charles Frankenthal, and Edward A. Leight of the National Defense committee of the Chicago chapter of the D. A. R., and the proceeds will be given to the Woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, to help towards the $100,000 fund being raised by the latter for their important and varied work.

Spends Week-Ends in Town.

In previous years Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank's week-end house parties have been one of the distinctive features of summer life in her large circle of friends and acquaintances. There was hardly a Saturday and Sunday during the summer when she did not gather in the famous old Fairbank mansion on the shores of blandly smiling Lake Geneva a goodly company of gay folk. High brows and frivolous mingled there in a friendly informality that made these house parties real events.

Fashionable Lake Foresters enjoyed hobnobbing with wise and witty professors from the university, and vice versa. The Lake Foresters found the professors frequently frivolous, while the latter discovered gleams of marked intelligence in the former. They were happy affairs.

But nowadays Mrs. Fairbank is giving so much of her time to providing entertainment for the soldiers and sailors who flock Sundays to Chicago that she seldom has an opportunity for Lake Geneva week-ends. Last Sunday she and Mrs. Charles Kohl and Mrs. Mortimer Singer gave at the Studebaker to our embryo warriors one of the finest vaudeville shows ever put on a Chicago stage.

Give Their Holiday.

Imagine at one entertainment seeing such a galaxy as James J. Corbett, Frank Tinney, the Duncan sisters, Henry Lewis, Virginia Lissinger, De Lyle Alda, Francis Arns, Johnson and Olson, Betty Parker, and Harry Watson Jr., Jack Norworth, the Casinos, the Five Cubans, the Four Ishikawa brothers, and the Winter Garden chorus! Good patriots all, as they all gave their services on the one half holiday in the week that is theirs. There's no money gift that is quite the equivalent of this one precious half holiday.

Assisting Mrs. Fairbank last Sunday in receiving the jackies and soldiers were Mmes. Potter Palmer II., Thomas Knight, Ernest Freund, Arnold Chapman, and James Keeley.

This afternoon Mr. Powers opens his theater to the men in uniform when May Robson and her company will present their piece, "A Little Bit Old Fashioned."

When the pavilion in Grant park, which is to house the "Khaki and Blue" club, is finished, these theatrical entertainments will be given there. They in no way conflict with the work of Mrs. Samuel Insull and her committee in getting theaters to open Sundays for men on leave in Chicago, which was so successful during the spring months, and which will probably be resumed again in the autumn.

Young Folks to Give Play.

Have you heard of the "Would-Be Actors' club?" It's very name wins one's sympathy. It is composed of some of the youth of Lake Forest's f. f.'s, and is a sort of second growth on ground dedicated to Melpomene et al. by the Aldis playhouse players.

The Would-Be actors will present Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer" at the Durant institute in Lake Forest next Friday evening at 8:15. Miss Frances Kemp is directing the play and among the young people taking part in it are the Misses Hollis Letts, Roberta and Ellen Thorne, and Mary Meeker, and the Messrs. Kellogg Gary, Byron Harvey Jr., Durant Smith, and Arthur Meeker Jr.

The proceeds of the entertainment will help the Italian wounded and refugees. The Would-Bes are working so hard over the performance that they don't know whether the weather be hot or cold or whether we've a drought or a flood.

The French aviation pictures have a few more days at the Art institute. Tomorrow the women of the One Hundred and Forty-ninth Field Artillery relief will be in charge of the exhibit. Mrs. William Hardy of River Forest, Mrs. Henry King of Battery D, Mrs. A. L. Bolte of Battery E, Mrs. Albert Wolf, and Mrs. Arthur Rogers will be there in the afternoon, while Mrs. William Wroe of Battery C and Miss Margaret Reilly, Col. Reilly's sister, will take charge of the evening exhibit.

It's a show well worth several visits. The receipts will be divided between the children of aviators who fall in battle and the American Fund for French Wounded.

Onwentsia Golfers Knitting After a Round on the Links.

Mrs. George H. Ingalls   Mrs. Frank C. Letts.

A good game of golf consists of eighteen holes and the proverbial "nineteenth," so masculine devotees of the game affirm; and so the women at Onwentsia always have a knitting bee on the terrace after a morning or afternoon on the links. And numerous are the socks and sweaters which are knit and purled on the "nineteenth hole" by the women of Lake Forest. Mrs. George H. Ingalls and Mrs. Frank C. Letts are among those who are seen at the club almost every Tuesday, which is Ladies' day at Onwentsia.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS

Need of Trained Women Workers for Many Jobs

By Florence Schee.

[Chairman of the Employment Department of the Woman's Committee of the State Council of Defense.]

SIX months of experience in the employment department of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense have shown that now, more than ever before, trained people are needed in industry. This means trained women, because the men are rapidly being removed from their work to help the government, either in active service in army or navy, or in other government departments.

Women with a regular high school training—with college training, too, of course, if possible—are needed. With this equipment women can take special training and fit themselves for the countless tasks that are calling them urgently now. During the last month our department has had a call for women to fill really large and important positions, for some of which we have not found the proper applicant. For instance, one firm is calling to us for the best filing expert in the city that we can provide, and we have so far looked in vain for that woman, for ours is a department for finding the proper woman for the proper job. Another firm has asked of us a first class employment manager; another a steel expert with engineering experience. And there are other important things for which women could qualify.

It is a part of the work that the woman's committee of the council regards as important to give expert help in trying to solve the industrial problems that have arisen as part of the work we are doing in the war. The more vocational guidance is given to girls and young women by the schools before the students leave their academic life and the more vocational guidance is provided to employés by industrial firms the more the difficulties of adjusting the labor supply to the demand will be lessened. That is one of the lessons taught by experience in this department.

One of the most important elements in securing a position is one's personality. Training is, of course, necessary for specialized jobs. But even with training one who lacks a winning or individual personality may not be able to hold a position that another less expert and possibly less technically qualified person might hold with great success.

During the last month we have moved to new quarters in the Monadnock building, room 228, and have been made a branch of the federal department of labor, coöperating with the federal employment agency. One of the difficulties of our work is shown in the case of women who, in a burst of patriotic fervor, register for work on farms or in munitions, plants and who when directed to actual positions fail to take the work. It is by this process of elimination, however, that we are able to select the right kind of material to fill these jobs successfully.

The total number of those who have registered in our department within the last month is 1,529. During the month we have placed in permanent positions 241 women. Among these positions are those of librarian, draftswoman, clerk, summer waitresses, munitions and government contract worker, factory worker, dietitian, usher, chemist, and many other trained and untrained workers.

Miss Elizabeth D. Douglass as the assistant manager of the department is doing unusually good work in interviewing special cases and in finding for special workers the task for which they are fitted.

Mrs. William H. Wright of 5613 South boulevard is chairman of the Thirty-third ward organization assisting the Chicago chapter of the American Red Cross in the junk drive for the benefit of the home service department, which cares for the dependent families of soldiers and sailors. Mrs. Wright is in the lead in the competition for the Marquis Eaton Red Cross banner to be awarded the organization securing the largest number of signed pledges from housewives guaranteeing the sale of all waste materials in exchange for Red Cross coupons for the duration of the war.

Miss Florence Schee is manager of the employment department of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense. Her reports at the monthly meetings of the executive committee of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense are filled with stories of human interest, and the women she has helped in securing work since she began her task in January number in the thousands.

WOMEN IN WARTIME.

An international demonstration, under the auspices of the Americanization committee of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, will take place on Tuesday afternoon at the Hotel La Salle at 2:30 o'clock. Costumed representatives of Poland, Ukraine, Bohemia, Slovak land, Croatia, Armenia, and Judea will sing the songs of the oppressed nations, and others will sing the songs of France, Switzerland, and China. A massed chorus of thirty nationalities will sing American patriotic airs. Felix J. Streyckmans, Peter S. Lambros, and Mrs. Constantine B. Howard will speak. Mrs. Edward W. Bemis is in charge of the demonstration.

Members of the Do Without club from California, Massachusetts, Montana, and other distant states are pledging themselves to devote to some war winning cause the money or time saved by giving up some pet luxury or indulgence. Each member is volunteering some chosen self-sacrifice, such as riding in taxis, wearing silk stockings, spending time to do tatting and devoting the time to the Red Cross—and countless other denials. The club is a part of the work of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense.

In six wards of the city food conservation kitchens are about to be opened as branches of the work being done at the food conservation bureau and conservation station at 28 South Wabash avenue under the direction of Mrs. Charles A. Munroe. The first of these kitchens was opened last week in the Twenty-seventh ward at Elston and Central Park avenues. The following is the program of lectures and demonstrations to be given during this week at the station in the loop, which is free to all:

Tomorrow—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Saving the Perishables," Mrs. W. G. Coffey.

Tuesday—11 a. m.: "Crumb Noodles and Stuffed Croquettes," Mrs. Alfred Hope; 2 p. m.: "Drying Fruits and Vegetables," J. H. Probst.

Wednesday—11 a. m.: "Saving Wheat and Meat," Miss Mildred Taber. 2 p. m.: "Cottage Cheese Dishes," Miss Mildred Taber.

Thursday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Saving Wheat and Sugar," Miss Ethel Lendrum.

Friday—11 a. m. and 2 p. m.: "Saving Fuel," Mrs. Helen Ruggles.

Pageants celebrating the Illinois centennial are to be given in at least twenty-four counties of the state, it is announced by Mrs. Roy Dickey, chairman of the centennial committee of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense. These counties have appointed pageant sites where the celebration will be held, and choruses are being trained by the local leaders.

This is Slogan week in the salvage campaign of Chicago chapter, American Red Cross, and the silk American flag offered by Mrs. Samuel T. Chase for the best slogan will be presented to the winner at tomorrow's meeting of the ward chairmen at 704 Garland building.

Every child under 6 years of age in five wards of the city has been recorded on government cards, showing his weight and measurements, as taken by workers in the child welfare movement under Mrs. Ira Couch Wood, chairman of the child welfare department of the State Council of Defense. These wards are 100 per cent perfect—the Third, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-second, and Twenty-fifth—and an effort is to be made to bring other wards in the city up to this mark before the campaign, which is part of the plans of the federal children's year, is completed. When the record from all the states has been made up officials at Washington will authorize the compilation of statistics showing the measurements of the average American child.

Marine recruiting stations are being helped by the speakers furnished by the speakers' bureau of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense. Mrs. Russell H. Opdyke is in charge of the workers at the recruiting station.

At the Food for France shop, 29 South Wabash avenue, the schedule of hostesses to Sept. 1 follows: Monday, Mrs. Charles A. Stonehill; Tuesday, Mrs. Joseph Harris; Wednesday, Mrs. Warren Wood; Thursday, Mrs. Archibald T. Naugle and Miss Nan Morier; Friday, Mrs. Frederick D. Montgomery; Saturday, Mrs. J. Foster Straw and Mrs. William J. Black.

Surgical dressings makers are wanted. The workrooms of the Chicago naval auxiliary of the Red Cross in the Stevens building will need many more if the prescribed quota of dressings is to be completed in time.

Following an appeal for social service workers made by Miss Christine Tomlins at the Woman's City club, twenty-two women volunteered. Miss Marion Curtiss, who is in charge of the woman's division of the social service committee of the State Council of Defense, has asked for more workers to come to 120 West Adams street for assignments.

A "story service" is part of the work of the war information department of the women's committee of the State Council of Defense, under Miss Virginia Chandler, chairman. For the benefit of those who are speaking for the council, Miss Chandler sends out war poems, interesting letters from the front, graphic descriptions of war work, and other matter that can be used by speakers.

Through a misunderstanding some of the Chicago chapter Red Cross knitters have been informed that Aug. 28 is the date on which all knitting is to be turned in. This is an error, as the date set was Aug. 20.

The emergency drivers of Chicago have accepted the invitation to become a unit of the national Red Cross motor corps service.

At the Food for France shop, 29 South Wabash avenue, a grab bag has been installed, a pound party table is being operated, and an ice cream parlor has been opened in the rear of the shop where conservation home made cakes are sold daily.

George M. Ludlow, director of the salvage drive, says: "One of the junk peddlers who answered the call card in the window of a residence on the south side bought half a wagon load of rags, bottles, and mixed papers. He loaded the materials and handed the housewife coupons equivalent to the regular price in currency. She refused the coupons, stating she wished to give the junk to the Red Cross. 'But the Red Cross already has the money for this junk,' said the peddler. 'No, I am patriotic,' insisted the woman. 'I am pledged to give all my junk to the Red Cross and I refuse to accept anything in payment.' In vain the peddler endeavored to explain that unless she accepted the coupon, which is simply a receipt for her donation to the cause, the Red Cross would lose the amount, as the coupon could not be canceled unless she took it, and it would be possible to use again in purchasing junk from some one else. Finally the peddler asked her to call the headquarters for directions, which she did, and much to her surprise she found the peddler was right."

Mrs. William H. Wright, chairman of the Thirty-third ward, is leading in the pledge competition for Marquis Eaton's prize Red Cross banner, with 3,375 signatures of housewives pledging themselves to sell all their waste to the junk man for coupons for the duration of the war.

Men from Chicago in training for army service are among those who are taking advantage of the entertainment offered at the new hostess house of the Y. W. C. A. at Portland, Me. There are five forts which surround the point on which the new house has been built. There are now eighty-three Y. W. C. A. hostess houses near the army and navy camps.

An appeal for a secretary and a housekeeper, who will teach home economics, has been made by a Chicago settlement through the social service department of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense. They will receive their living expenses in return. Miss Marion Curtiss, 120 West Adams street, will receive applications.

It has been found that the blind can, under the proper leadership, produce excellent results in gardening. A philanthropist in Evanston has donated an acre and a half of ground in La Grange as a war garden for the sightless.

Jackies' Bible Classes Need More Teachers

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

The Rev David A. Davy

THE securing of twice the number of Bible class teachers for the jackies at Great Lakes is the aim of a drive just started by the Y. M. C. A. Last Sunday there were seventy-one teachers present. It is hoped there will be 100 teachers present today and by Aug. 18 at least 150 teachers.

It is said the only limit on the number of jackies who will attend the Bible classes is caused by the number of teachers who can be secured. The goal set is for 10,000 jackies today, 12,000 for next Sunday, 14,000 for Aug. 11, and 15,000 for Aug. 18.

The committee in charge of the drive is E. C. Van Arsdel, 4432 Evans avenue, chairman; C. F. Congleton, the Rev. R. R. Bigger, S. P. Thrasher, W. J. Tomkins, and Dee A. Stoker. Any member of the committee will furnish information concerning the work.

A train leaves Chicago at 8 a. m. on the Chicago and Northwestern railroad for the Great Lakes. It is met at the station by trucks, which take the teachers to the places where the classes are taught. The instruction lasts forty-five minutes, and the teachers take a return train which enables them to reach Chicago in time to attend morning service in their own churches.

Some of the teachers who are already active are G. F. Appleyard, B. F. Andrews, Robert Barrie, Dr. J. B. Blackwell, F. M. Case, McKenzie Cleland, H. H. Deane, J. T. Drysdale, Hugh Foster, J. Kent Greene, the Rev. Dr. W. W. Johnstone, Lucius O. Lee, H. H. McLane, M. O. Naramore, J. B. Ott, Prof. A. W. Patten, H. H. Smith, Gideon Thompson, Dr. S. A. Wilson, and Paul A. Westburg.

Next Sunday there will be a special rally, to which all who are willing to inspect the work of the Bible classes are invited. An attendance at the rally does not commit any one to an acceptance of a position as teacher.

Lift Off Corns With the Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit! Just a drop of Freezone on a sore, touchy corn stops that corn from hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn right out, root and all. No pain, no soreness. You'll laugh.

Hard corns, soft corns, corns between the toes and painful calluses on bottom of feet loosen right up and fall off. Truly magic! Corns and calluses are needless. Don't keep them!

The Red Cross Teaching center in the Tower building is offering an emergency course in cooking to those who have had some food training. The course gives training in division canteen work, the keeping of accounts, the buying and storing of food in large quantities, the equipment necessary for canteen work, the study of kitchens handling large amounts of food, and the preparation of canteen menus.

Preliminary organization work for the next drive which will be launched by the women's section of the Cook county war savings committee is nearing completion, it was announced by Miss Agnes Foreman, general chairman. The drive, which will open Aug. 16, will be known as "Pershing week." During this week the women workers will set out to enlist an army of "Pershing patriots," who will be asked to purchase war savings stamps, to show they are backing up our leader and his soldiers in the trenches. The drive will close on Aug. 22, which will be officially proclaimed "Pershing day." A celebration in honor of the great American general is being planned for this day by members of the war savings committee and other patriotic organizations in the city.

One of the new features of the "Pershing drive" is the uniformed squad of women war workers, being organized under the direction of Mrs. A. Hamilton Lamm. More than a hundred prominent women war workers in the city received a questionnaire prepared by Mrs. Lamm asking for ideas and suggestions for the formation of this organization. It is planned to have his organization make a canvass of the city for subscriptions to the maximum—the $1,000 club.

Members in this organization will be limited to women who have sold at least one maximum membership.

The various chairmen who will work under Miss Foreman's direction were announced as follows: Mrs. P. J. O'Keeffe, hotels, restaurants, and clubs; Mrs. A. H. Lamm, street booths and uniformed squad; Mrs. C. B. Crosette, flying squadrons; Mrs. Harry Inwood, banks; Miss Amy Marr, director postal districts; Mrs. Frederick Tahl, buildings; Miss Gladys Marr, department stores; Mrs. Claribel Schmitt, unfederated organizations; Mrs. L. M. Pflaum, foreign language division.

The Young Women's Christian association has been asked by the government to take charge of the recreation program for girl workers in the munitions cantonments now being built. Miss Ernestine Friedmann of the industrial department of the Y. W. C. A. war work council is in charge of the work of forming industrial service clubs for these girl workers. In these munition cantonments the women will live in great dormitories like college campus houses. The groups in each club will be known as corps, and there will be instruction in military drill whenever possible by army officers, the object being physical development.

The department of comforts and knitting, Chicago chapter, American Red Cross, is in possession of a lot of unused yarn which has been turned back by various auxiliaries. In order to utilize this material as promptly as possible a new department has been established at 58 East Washington street. Any expert knitter desiring to assist in rapidly changing this unfinished product into completed sweaters, wristlets, or socks is urged to go there on Tuesday or Thursday afternoon from 1 to 5 or Saturday from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., when the wool will be given out and the completed garments received.

Miss Inez Hubbard

Miss Inez Hubbard of Princeton, Ill., will sing for the jackies at Great Lakes today and for the soldiers at Camp Grant next Sunday.

"Katcha-Koo," a musical extravaganza, is to be staged at the Marlowe theater on Aug. 21 and 22, under the auspices of the Federated Women's Clubs of the Third congressional district to raise funds for maintaining a district community housekeeper.

The following letter from Herbert Hoover, United States food administrator, to Mrs. Charles H. Munroe, chairman of the food conservation station, 28 South Wabash avenue, has been given out:

"It has been brought to my attention that you have been instrumental in creating a food conservation station in Chicago to set forth more clearly the necessity of food conservation in the successful prosecution of the war. I wish to commend you and the other good ladies of your committee for your voluntary and sincere effort, and, indeed, such concrete evidences of coöperation are the inspiration to the accomplishment of the task assigned me."

Six more of the wards of the city have established their own conservation stations.

Mrs. J. H. Kaufman of the Chicago Woman's club is at the head of a committee which will arrange for entertainment for soldiers and sailors at the Municipal pier. Any one desiring to give such an affair may leave an application with Mrs. Kaufman's committee.

Women who are seriously interested in becoming proficient machinists are given the opportunity to work on a government contract in a machine shop by applying at the employment department of the Woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, room 228 Monadnock building, 53 East Jackson boulevard.

The engagement is announced of Miss Ruby Gray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Gray of 4024 Clarendon avenue, to Lieut. Herlan Dalton of Kentucky. Lieut. Dalton is stationed at Camp Funston, Kas.

CLUB NOTES

The ladies' auxiliary of the Illinois Sportsmen club is giving its annual picnic today at Jestram's grove, Hillside, in honor of the members of the club, who are in the service of the army and navy.

Tomorrow morning the National Ship of States club will give an outing and auto ride, and a luncheon at the municipal sanitarium. Sailors from the U. S. S. Commodore will be guests.

The last meeting of St. Mary's settlement board has outlined its plan of work for the coming season and closed its fiscal year with a social. The new officers are: Mrs. William E. Gallagher, president; Mrs. C. M. Hanley, vice president; Mrs. William H. Costello, recording secretary; Mrs. J. L. Murray, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Harry P. Kenny, treasurer.

A meting of the committee on public affairs will be held on Saturday at 10 o'clock in the rooms of the Chicago Woman's club in the Fine Arts building.

ECZEMA 3 YEARS CUTICURA HEALS

Began As Water Blisters. Itching Terrible.

"I had eczema on my limbs for three years. It began in the form of water blisters, and my clothing rubbing it would cause the itching to be something terrible, so that I scratched till it would bleed. My limbs were swollen and at times I could not sleep, and would have to quit work.

"I did not get relief until I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after using them three months I was healed." (Signed) Frank Ranney, 1016 Crawford St., Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 16, 1918.

FUTURE EVENTS

During the winter there are so many benefits for various charities that one imagines that surely the summer will be "benefitless," but this is never the case. On the contrary, lawn and garden fêtes thrive, and since one cannot in these wartimes give any sort of an affair purely for social reasons, admission is charged and some one of the many war or home charities receives the proceeds. And a good thing it is, too, for a garden fête on the grounds of one of the beautiful north shore estates gives tired war workers an opportunity of enjoying an afternoon and evening in the country and at the same time materially aiding a pet charity.

The next fête will be held in Oconomowoc, on the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Earling of 1400 North State parkway, for the benefit of the fatherless children of France. Mrs. Lawrence Fitch of Milwaukee, who was formerly Miss Harriet M. Earling, is in charge of the arrangements, and assisting her are the many Chicago women who are at Oconomowoc for the season. Mrs. Fitch is chairman of the eastern Wisconsin district for the fatherless children and also Milwaukee chairman of the organization.

Among the features of the affair will be dancing in the sun parlors, shooting galleries, tennis games, a tea garden, a pancake booth, where Aunt Jemima will preside; a country store, fortune telling booths, movies, and a booth of French children. Supper will be served at 6, 6:45, and 7:30 o'clock at $1 a plate. The fête will be from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until midnight, and cars and trains will be met every half hour by autos, which will carry guests to "Brae Head," the Earling estate.

Moving pictures of the South Shore melting pot and also scenes from the horse show will be given on an outdoor screen at the club this evening at 8:30 o'clock. In addition, Barbara Castleton and John Bowers in "Heredity" will be shown. The Red Cross activities of the club continue in spite of the hot weather, and almost every day Mrs. A. D. Curtis, Mrs. William F. Bode, Mrs. W. A. Magie, Mrs. H. P. Sieh, Mrs. John G Campbell, and Mrs George A. Ogle are working.

Mr. and Mrs. Sol J. Drielsma of 5932 Indiana avenue will celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary today.

Tomorrow evening the junior auxiliary, Daughters of Zion, Jewish Day nursery, will give a linen shower and entertainment.

The annual entertainment and tea given by the board of directors of the Holiday home at Lake Geneva for the settlement workers of Chicago, who select the children to be sent to the home during the summer, will be given on Tuesday. Mrs. Francis T. A. Junkin, Mrs. Harold Hartshorn, Miss Elizabeth Chapin, Miss Katherine Lefens, Miss Rosalie Wacker, Mrs. Robert Hunter, Miss Alma Schmidt, Miss Ethel Hately, and Miss Katherine Bartholomy will receive at the tea.

The Woman's Fellowship club will give a benefit card party at the Chicago Beach hotel on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Washington Society by MmeZ.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special Correspondence.]—The summer days are speeding swiftly on their way and Washington grows busier all the time. No cessation of activities along any line is visible; people come and go; each day new folk arrive at the capital and each day as many depart. An introduction and a new acquaintance follows in the wake of a good-by and a severed friendship.

The Rev. Joseph T. Kelly, who is pastor of the Presbyterian church which President and Mrs. Wilson attend almost every Sunday, said not long ago that Washington was a pathetic city—every one was always saying good-by to some one they had grown fond of. And while, of course, Washington has no monopoly on that sort of thing at the present state in the world's affairs, it is probably the city of cities when it comes to changes.

Almost any day there you can see Mrs. Thornton L. F. Meadows at the head of the canteen station, seeing to it that the soldiers on the troop trains are well supplied with eatables and smokables.

Meet When Aeroplanes Fly.

Several new slogans are being adopted in Washington. "Meet me when the aeroplanes fly" is one of the latest, and then is the time when society turns out, closing in around the circular drive about the hangars and watching the aeroplanes mount and maneuver high in the air.

President and Mrs. Wilson have been there several times lately in the cool of the early evening. I saw the French ambassador and Mme. Jusserand there once this week, but they were not in a motor; they were in their carriage, which they prefer on the whole to a machine.

Then, too, they are right in line with the new campaign of "conserve gasoline," for that is what society is agitating, here and at the different resorts. You should see the women at Newport falling back on the horse and doing a lot of walking instead of riding, and at White Sulphur Springs every one is so head and ears in work that they haven't much time to ride anyway.

Week Ends in Blue Ridge.

Last week in Blue Ridge revealed many husbands week-ending with their wives at that most popular resort. The Italian ambassador, accompanied by Gen. Guglielmotti, the military attaché of the embassy, returned here on Monday after having been in Blue Ridge over Sunday with the Countess di Cellerre. The Argentine ambassador with a party of friends went there on Saturday to spend as much of the following week as possible with Mme. Naon at their cottage there.

The British ambassador and Lady Reading were as usual in the country over Sunday. Dr. Koo went up to Blue Ridge on Wednesday to be with his wife and baby, and the Siamese minister is at East Gloucester, Mass.

Mrs. Howard Taft's youngest sister, Mrs. Henry F. Lippit, is at Beverly Farms, Mass., for the summer. In Washington she is better known as Mrs. T. K. Laughlin, for she lived here during the years of her widowhood. Her present husband is the former Senator Lippitt of Rhode Island. They are both rejoicing over the birth of a daughter about two weeks ago.

Duane-French Wedding Party.

There has been a decided dearth of weddings among society folk this week, but an interesting fact just revealed is that Mr. and Mrs. Sylvanus Stokes Jr. will be members of the wedding party to attend Miss Daphne Elise Duane and Capt. Richard Barton French of Boston at their marriage late in August at Manchester-by-the-Sea. Mrs. Carlton Channing Duane announced the engagement a few days ago.

Mrs. Duane, who has been engaged in war work in London, will come back shortly, and among those who are expected to go to Manchester for the ceremony are Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Jay Pierce Lorillard, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and George Quintard Whitney.

There will be only the immediate friends and relatives among the guests. Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, the sister of the bridegroom, will be matron of honor, and Kingdon Gould will be the best man, and Stuart Biddle Duane, U. S. N. R. F., will also be in the wedding party.

Last Monday night Richard Crane entertained at dinner at the Club de Vingt, and his guests included Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Carry and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Letts. Mrs. Crane has gone to Woods Hole, Mass., where she will spend the remainder of the summer. Mr. Crane will remain at Maplewood farm, McLean, Va., joining Mrs. Crane whenever his duties permit.

Senator and Mrs. Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Logan, and Mrs. Borden Harriman are among those who entertained last Tuesday night at dinner at the Club de Vingt.

POSLAM MADE TO HEAL YOUR BROKEN-OUT SKIN

If you attend to Pimples, Rashes and all skin troubles with Poslam, and do so promptly, they will not develop and spread.

Unless you have actually seen Poslam's work and know how readily it takes hold, stopping the itching at once, you will hardly believe its effects possible in so short a time.

In Eczema, Poslam's action appears all the more remarkable when the trouble is persistently stubborn and nothing else seems to bring lasting relief. Poslam is harmless always.

Miss Martha Mott

The engagement of Miss Martha Mott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willard E. Mott of 253 West Sixty-sixth street, to Lieut. Gove Compton of Cincinnati is announced. Lieut. Compton is stationed with the marine aviation corps at Miami, Fla. The date for the wedding has not been announced.

Vaudeville Wit

McVICKER'S.

Valentine Vox: One day Mrs. Riley saw Dinah come downstairs, ready to go out, dressed in a bright scarlet dress with a large scarlet willow plume in her hat and a red parasol in her hand.

"Why, Dinah," said she, "I thought you were going to a funeral."

"Yes, I'se going to a funeral," said Dinah.

"But you ought not to wear red to a funeral," said Mr. Riley. "You ought to be dressed quietly in a dark dress."

Dinah meditated a moment and then said: "Well, Ah reckon I won't go back and change now. I'll just wear this."

Some three weeks later Dinah told Mrs. Riley that she was going to leave to be married. Mrs. Riley expressed astonishment that Dinah even had an admirer, whereupon Dinah simpered and twisted the corner of her apron and said: "Ah didn't have one till just lately. Remember that funeral Ah went to one time when I wore my red dress? Well, missus, dat shade of red done kotched de eye ob de corpse's husband."

Mrs. Riley also employs a colored man of work, who is certainly the laziest man in town. The other morning he came to her said: "I gotta get off tomorrow."

"Get off tomorrow, Ebenezer?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"But I can't spare you very well."

"I gotta go; it's lodge business."

"O, that new lodge you joined."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Why are you so badly needed at the meeting?"

"Ah am de sublime king."

"You have been a member of the lodge only two weeks and yet you tell me you have been made the sublime king?"

"Yes, ma'am, I'se de sublime king."

"How does that come?"

"Well, you see," said Ebenezer, "in ouah lodge de sublime king am de lowest office what dey is."

And there's Riley's son Danny. The other day he found a dime, so he hurried into the grocery store to spend a part of it.

"How much is a nickel's worth of cheese?" said Danny.

"Can't sell you a nickel's worth," said the grocer, "it's too high."

"All right," said Danny, "then gimme a dime's worth."

The grocer cut a thin slice and Danny remarked, "Say, cull, you pretty near missed it, didn't you?"

One time Danny was looking at a picture of the prophet Elijah going to heaven in a chariot of fire. When he saw the halo about Elijah's head he exclaims, "O, look, mamma, he's carrying an extra tire."

RIALTO.

La Tour and Gold:

"Say, Tommy, did you know I used to live in Scotland?"

"No; is that so?"

"I went back there last summer."

"Go 'way; where did you get the money from?"

"I didn't have to have any money; I didn't need any money. I heard a bagpipe playing 'Bonnie Dundee' one night and it carried me back."

"Did you hear the latest news?"

"No, I did not."

"They are going to make every police officer wear rubber boots."

"What for?"

"To keep them from waking each other up."

"What nationality are you?"

"That is what has been troubling me for a long while. My father was an Italian and my mother was a Turk; I was born on an English ship in Chinese waters under the French flag. Now, you'll have to tell me what I am."

"It's hard to tell what you are."

ART by Eleanor Jewett

Picture Poems in Fenton Loan at Art Institute

Fair roads and fair weather are calling me
    forth—
  And the ceaseless boom of the sea.
The wild birds sing, and the columbines ring
Their faint, pale bells where the fishes spring
In the brown of the brook, and the butterflies wing
  Their love flights silently.

Fair roads and fair weather are calling me
    forth—
  O heart! Do they call me in vain?
The green buds burst on the elder trees,
The smell of the world comes down the breeze,
The buttercups brush the cattle's knees—
  And all roads lead to Spain.

TO Spain, the land of heart's desire—to Spain, the bourn of the nomad's visioning—to Spain, the fulfil'ment of how many castles in the air! To lie in the deep grass with the feathery blades waving over one's face in the magic symphony of the eternal harmonies of a summer's day, birds leading high above in the treetops and from the ground the drumming of crickets and xylophonic measures of the katydids, over all the deep blue depths of the depthless azure flecked where the sun sets with the billowing sails of vessels of cloud filling before the wind to start again perhaps on the voyage of the golden fleece at the foot of the rainbow.

Of such imaginings is the kingdom of content. And to such imaginings is the mind insensibly led by the pastoral paintings of Marie Dieterle and M. Coulaud, with, in the offing, the landscape by Julian Rix and the sunset by Blakelock to lend an unneeded spur to the unlagging inspiration.

These paintings form part of the loan collection now hung in room 47 of the Art institute and lent by William T. Fenton. They are much worth while. The Henner, on which one would love to linger, conjuring from the depths of memory translucent coloring and vivid reds, is rather disappointing. It is a small painting of a girl's head and does not illustrate the possibilities in portraiture which have made the artist's name famous. On the opposite wall is a girl's head painted by Lenoir. It is appealing and pretty in a Dresden china way. "The Cradle Song," by Arthur Hacker, R. A., a gift to the institute from Mr. Fenton, is serenely lovely.

A collection of prints and engravings by Joseph Pennell is to be shown soon in Classics hall of the University of Chicago. Mr. Pennell intends to be in the city this week and will lecture on the making of his prints in the various munition plants and other war factories of France, England, Belgium, and the United States.

The Hamilton club has succeeded in a venture unprecedented in the annals of city club life. It has realized the importance good art plays in the welfare of the world and, living up to its convictions, it has installed a most interesting exhibit of paintings in its rooms. Among the artists represented are William M. Chase, Ralph A. Blakelock, William Keith, Emil Carlson, Leonard Ochtman, Edna Vognild, and Pierre Nuyttens. A room is devoted to Mr. Nuytten's drawings and prints. The complete series of his war etchings hang on one wall, and opposite is a group of portraits. Interesting among the war drawings is the one which, it is said, has been given in the original to the queen of Belgium.

Recently a meeting was held in the trustees' room of the Art institute to discuss the advisability of organizing an Illinois chapter of the Art Alliance of America. The Art alliance itself was originated in the east, founded in 1914, and has its headquarters in New York. It has a membership of about 700, and has been proved of great value in promoting a true coöperation between the artistic and commercial worlds. This union, of what many hold to be opposites, is now become a war measure. Its aims are to raise the standard of quality and establish aesthetic traditions for American products.

There is more in this than a superficial reading of the sentence suggests. In times gone by America lost her markets in the orient through carelessness along such lines—to be exact, through the shoddiness of her goods and their poor packing.

The container plays a greater part in the selling power of an article than one imagines offhand. People purchase to a great extent on sight. If the article lives up to the attractiveness of its packing they continue to purchase it.

For this sound reason "all that glitters is not gold" should not be true of American products. They should be as good as they are labeled. They should answer to the value set upon them by the stamp of the firm from which they spring. And the advertisements and containers should be attractive in proportion to the worth of the article. Hence the union of art and trade as a war measure.

After the war business will revive. France and England as well as Germany will seek business prosperity. America must not lag. Whatever measure will help to put our trade to the front should be undertaken. The union will also be of importance in attaching more closely the interests of the city to the smaller towns.

Among the men interested in the organization of the Illinois chapter are Lorado Taft, Ralph Fletcher Seymour, Eames MacVeagh, George W. Eggers, Lionel Robertson, Herbert Mulford, Alexander Revell, Harold Bradley, and Walter Sargent.

Another after war measure, and one that comes near the heart of every one, is the proposition to establish in Paris a Chicago memorial hospital. It will be built and equipped by the citizens of Illinois and Chicago. There will be rooms in it to the memory of our boys who have given their lives for the life of France. One room is designed in memory of the late Dr. Henry B. Favill. To quote from the word I received about it: "This is to be a beautiful and lasting gift to France, and will be a tribute to the nations whose sons have fought together for freedom." A more beautiful tribute could scarcely have been conceived.

Among those who are chiefly concerned in the movement now are Dr. Truman W. Brophy, Dr. C. N. Johnson, Mrs. Archibald Freer, Mrs. Frank Sayre Cowgill, and Miss Margaret Williamson.

ASTRONOMY

THE CYCLE OF EVOLUTION: DRAWN BY S F MAXWELL

THE SIRIAN STARS.

ONE of the greatest revelations astronomy brings is that no star or system of suns endures long without change. The solar system is not eternal. There was a time when the earth, with all its multitude of physical features, was a cloud of gas, and the time will come when it will return to that state.

While it is not possible to measure the life of a sun in terms of years, because the unit is so small that the figures are of a meaningless and staggering magnitude, yet it is possible to assign to every star certain well marked typical stages of development.

The Orion stars are the earliest form of true suns. While a star is condensing out of a nebula, it is in the Orion stage. As soon as it ceases to grow and begins the slow process of cooling it assumes the type represented by Vega or Sirius. The Sirian stars are huge in bulk and of low density. Often the outer layers are no more solid than air. They are made principally of hydrogen gas, and are characterized by their great heat and brilliancy.

An ideal view of Sirius would show an intensely white ball enveloped in a great cloud of bluish white flame. Its surface would be singularly free from storms and spots, indicating that the heat is radiating equally in all directions, and not in selected zones, like the sun and red stars.

On Sirius the metals are just beginning to reveal their identity in the clouds of heated gases. Calcium and magnesium are the most pronounced. In the succeeding stage, which is represented by the sun, almost all the familiar metals found on earth appear.

Vaudeville Wit.

RIALTO.

Joe Reddy: I had the pleasure of attending a swell ball given by Count Waldorf de Lime, younger brother of Sir Chloride de Lime, at his beautiful country home, Garbage manor, part of the famous Dishwater estate. It was given in honor of his daughter's coming out. I forgot what she was in for.

On this occasion the grounds were beautifully lit up. And so were the guests. As I started to enter the baronical castle, I was halted by a funkey dressed in knee breeches and white stockings. Of course, he had on other things, too. I believe he was called a footman. I bear the marks of his foot yet.

While strolling through the grounds, with Lady Bilgewater, her dog bit me, and I nearly died of hydrophobia. Then I bit him, and he expired of delirium tremens.

But to go a moment from the "reblime" to the "subdiculous." In the good old days a girl stayed at home because she had nothing to wear. Nowadays she goes out for the same reason.

The other day I almost got into trouble. I saw a lot of people going into a church, and, thinking Billy Sunday must be in town, I walked in also. At first I thought it was a funeral, but folks looked too sad for that, so I figured it must be a wedding.

Presently a large, determined looking woman with orange blossoms in her hair and garlic on her breath marched boldly down the aisle. She was the blushing bride. If I had as homely a face I'd blush, too. Just behind her walked a pale, hesitating young man who looked as if he didn't have a friend on earth. He was the gloom—I mean the groom.

After the minister had pronounced the fatal words that changed the poor boob from a free and independent citizen into a meal ticket for life I availed myself of the invitation to step up and kiss the bride. What do I care for my health? As my lips came in contact with her tunnel entrance I got my mouth full of cornstarch—the first square meal I had eaten in a week.

"Our Country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong."
—Stephen Decatur.

A SCHOOL OF DEMOCRATIC CITIZENSHIP.

Universal training means a great deal more than the preparation of American citizens to defend their own firesides with their own strength. It means a great deal more than military training or the creation of a body of citizen soldiery always ready to defend their country. If the hopes of optimists are realized and this war results in a peace which endures for many years or forever, the system of universal training would nevertheless be vitally useful. Defense from foreign foes is but the rock foundation of the system. But universal training is also training in the moral essentials of democratic citizenship. An army, organized as the American army is organized now, and as the universal training forces will be organized, is the greatest school of democratic essentials existing.

This will seem a paradox to the excited humanitarians of the "society opposed to militarism" who fought so frantically against preparation up to the threshold of war. It is true nevertheless. If democracy means every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost, military organization and training is despotism. But democracy in the American ideal is ordered liberty and the ideal citizen of a democracy is not an irresponsible atom, but a soldier of the common good.

Under universal training youths at an impressionable age will be taken out of the environment which their parents' circumstances, earned or unearned, have created for them and put in a public organization whose basis is equality of opportunity and whose first law is the subordination of self to a common purpose. In this new environment the bricklayer's son will stand shoulder to shoulder with the multi-millionaire. If he is more skillful, intelligent, strong of body and will, he will pass over the other to a position of command. He will give orders and the other will obey. The college man's bunkie may be a boy from the farm or the shop. Boys of different race and traditions will learn that their own kind has no claim to general superiority. The truth upon which democracy is based will come home to them—namely: that men resemble one another very much more than they differ; that their differences are very largely the effects of environment or of accident and lie upon the surface of their natures, changeable and not essential.

Our forefathers expected the public school to accomplish this and to some extent it has. But in the larger sense it has failed. One of the superficial reasons for its failure is that the public schools reflect social cleavage. Schools are located in districts more or less homogeneous in social character. People of the same social attainments and financial condition live in the same locality. Their children carry into the schools the distinction of dress, thought, and feeling of the household and retain them there.

Yet this is not the fundamental reason why the public school has fallen short of our need as a maker of democratic citizenship. Where the public school has fallen short, military training will succeed because its very essence is subordination to a common purpose and that is the only foundation of democratic citizenship.

Though we theorize and appeal as we please, our civilian sense of this basic truth remains weak. In military organization it is enforced; it is the law of the military life.

It must be the law of democracy if democracy is to survive.

Military organization means loyalty to a common purpose, loyalty of each individual to that purpose, personal responsibility for the exact and efficient working of each individual's part in furthering that purpose, and the most vital interdependence of all individuals from the private to the commander in chief.

In civil organization all this is conceived as an ideal. In military organization it is imposed as a vital necessity. Loyalty to the common purpose down to the last detail is enforced in military organization because slackness and insubordination mean death and defeat. Civil life seldom penalizes so heavily. Furthermore, military organization simplifies and concentrates life upon its organization so that the soldier cannot be unconscious as the civilian usually is of the machinery of his own social existence and what his own responsibility for maintaining it is.

Take our young men of 18 or 19, give them a year of life ordered on military lines, make the instruction intelligible in a broader way as citizen duty by patriotic instruction and we shall have a higher level of citizenship than we ever have had. The training camps will be schools of efficient democracy, as useful to the republic in peace as they are necessary for war.

SCHOOL BOOKS AND AMERICANISM.

The proposal is made that a national survey of school text books be undertaken for the purpose of eliminating those books which in the light of events may be out of harmony with American principles and American ideals. That a good many of our history texts might well be discarded is clearly shown by Charles Altschul's monograph on "The American Revolution in Our School Text Books." Mr. Altschul discovered that a large percentage of books on American history now used in the schools tend to give a distorted view of the circumstances that led up to our revolutionary war. The net result, in his opinion, is to produce a prejudice against Great Britain which is based on perverted or at least insufficient appreciation of the facts.

There are also the books which might be loosely characterized as "pro-German" in character. The question of discrimination in rejecting these books is obviously a difficult one and one which ought not to be decided without a certain degree of caution. We may all agree that any book which creates sympathy for the German cause should be unhesitatingly eliminated; we may perhaps conclude that the teaching of German in the lower grades is of dubious propriety; but these considerations hardly seem to warrant a wholesale educational war against the intellectual products of Germany. It is quite possible that by a better comprehension of these products we may better prepare ourselves against any new and noxious developments of Prussianism. Our engineers do not refuse to study the German guns or the composition of German gas.

But the most important object that could be accomplished by a survey of school text books would be to make certain that our instruction is guided primarily by the idea of promoting American nationalism. It has too often been the case in the past that a few lessons in civics, so-called, were the only contribution to the development of the spirit of Americanism. A certain amount of technical information, without life or meaning, was inculcated, but that was about all.

The stimulus of the war affords an opportunity to bring about a great reform in this regard.

VIOLENT DISORDER A NATIONAL STIGMA.

Even as an individual is or may be judged by the acts finding their impulse in his weakest moments and negativing the disciplined and deliberated processes which ordinarily govern his life, so a nation may be judged and condemned by the acts of lawless or irresponsible individuals who form numerically a negligible part of the community.

An act of social violence may find its impulse in an element by the acts of which it is unfair to judge the community, but judgment will not discriminate. A lynching brings odium to an entire population. The inequity of such wholesale condemnation is modified. The ferocity of a reckless, savage, lawless minority in which a mob can be formed has a relation to the failure of the reputable majority to make a standard of social discipline and of social order prevail against excitements and weaknesses.

There is some justice in the indictment of a whole community. There will always be in every community weak, violent, easily enraged, readily infuriated elements. If the prevailing scheme of order is defective these elements need only occasion and they are at the work which disgraces the entire populace, and some of the blame must be put upon the whole community, which knows that its composition contains such factors and may be sure that some time or other there will be provocation.

At present social violence can compromise the national reputation. The federal authorities find that the murder of Robert P. Praeger at Collinsville was far from a parochial incident. It is being used to characterize the American nation. A few hundred enraged men in that small Illinois town, escaping from control and yielding to rage or whisky, contrived an episode which stamps a lawless ferocity upon American nature.

Americans have not the best reputation abroad. We have only to examine our own popular opinions of the Russians, derived from our knowledge of pogroms and the persecution of Jews, the slaughter and torture of them, to have indicated to us what opinion of the United States penetrates Europe with the stories of the burning of Negroes at the stake.

Neither communities nor nations can separate themselves, to outside observation, from the acts of their vicious elements. The international significance of American violence upon the person of aliens, enemy aliens, is so great that President Wilson is about to call upon Americans to recognize the importance to the nation.

Such an appeal cannot be effectively made to the people who are immediately responsible for outrages. If they were amenable to reason they would correct themselves. It may bring emotionally sensitive people to their senses, such people as might find an act of patriotic merit in an act of violence which stigmatizes the nation. But its real appeal must be to the reputable, controlled, and disciplined people who in a community generally are aware of the potentialities of violence and who can take the measures needed to prevent trouble before it gathers headway and gets out of control.

Where community sentiment steadily and stanchly backs authority the means of prevention are available. It is a community in which authority reflects timidity and fear that violence will lead to disgrace.

When known elements of disorder and violence are unrestrained in their provocative measures, and when after the outrage they escape punishment for the social crime, then you have general responsibility clearly established and cause and effect clearly revealed.

Editorial of the Day

PROFITEERS.

[From the Saturday Evening Post.]

Socialists, particularly in England, used the word "profiteers" long before the war. Pretty often they meant by it whoever seeks a profit. Taken in that sense everybody in business or in a gainful occupation is either a profiteer or an idiot; for business is a quest of profit. That is its ever constant motive. In a great majority of the ordinary everyday decisions that are made hour by hour a man takes this course rather than that because he thinks it will be profitable.

And this applies as much to the farmer, the plumber, and the dentist as to Morgan. Workmen strike in the hope of profiting by it.

War has popularized the word here, but we need a definition of it. Senator Borah, commenting on the president's revenue message, in which he said profiteering existed here, recently offered a definition—to wit: "The man who takes advantage of his country's perilous situation to gather extraordinary profits; who is taking advantage of his country's stress and trial to increase enormously, unjustly, and unfairly his individual gain."

If we stick to that definition the entire country can agree heartily that a profiteer is a wretch for whom no punishment is too severe. But a high rate of profit is not always evidence of profiteering. The day before these lines were written a farmer showed us a check for a drove of hogs.

He had happened to be so situated that he could feed the brutes at very low cost. His profit may have been 100 per cent. But that's no reason for hanging him. Because an ill equipped, poorly managed business makes only a third the profit of a well equipped, ably managed business it is by no means three times as patriotic. The intention to take advantage of the country's stress in order to gouge is what constitutes the crime.

"WILLFUL MURDER"

BY PRIVATE PEAT.

THAT phrase "To make the world a decent place to live in," has struck me forcibly as I see it displayed on poster after poster throughout the length and breadth of the country. Do people grasp the significance of it? Do people over here guess the meaning? Do people realize that the world is no longer a decent place in which to live? Do people know that they are responsible for the bringing back of the world to decency?

A decent place to live—even a decent place to die is denied us now, since the earth has been outraged by an insane foe.

I have been under fire in the trenches of France. I have faced the hail of enemy barrage fire in an attack. I have ridden on motorbuses along shelled roadways on the way to the front; I have chanced submarines when crossing the Atlantic and the channel. Possibly all, barring gas and liquid fire attacks, are fairly legitimate forms of modern warfare. We are at war, and we can countenance these things which are inevitable in war, which are directed against soldiers—fighting men—but what place has deliberate murder in war?

It isn't long since I heard of the death of a friend's baby. Eighteen months old—strong, hearty, happy. The reason? Inflammation of the lungs. The cause? Being lifted time after time and carried, wrapped warmly, it is true, from its cozy cot through winter nights to a nearby shelter to escape the bombs, the aerial torpedoes and the incendiary shells dropped by hostile airmen.

A decent—God in heaven, is there a man with red blood in his veins still hanging back? I know, of course, it was an English baby—is there any good cause, except luck in geographical position, that it was not an Amercan baby?

I have been in England during raids. I have seen mutilated bodies crushed beneath a weight of fallen masonry. I have seen torn streets and bloody pavements. I have lain helpless while nurses lifted, as best they might, heavy, battle scarred patients from hospital wards to bombproof shelters underground from deliberate attacks on their maimed bodies, for the Boche seeks out hospitals as he seeks out schools.

The Boche is an efficient scientist. Most frequently he has guided his raids over London by the light of the moon. But he depends on every freak and chance of nature to help him. He is the one person who has reached the acme of opportunism. The first very heavy raid over central London was on Sept. 13, 1915. They have been going on steadily and increasingly since. I saw that particular one. I have seen others.

We brought down some Zepps. There was the one at Cuffley, which fell, a mass of flame, hurtling its crew to eternity. The bodies had a military funeral. We Britishers are like that. On the other hand, the verdict of the coroners on the dead remains of mutilated women and children was "wilful murder."

Then the lighter aircraft came. Gothas—swift, flying low with ease, and difficult to locate by searchlight, less area to hit by anti-aircraft guns, more danger of making a target of our own airmen flying to engage the enemy in the sky. Gothas which can hide behind a cloud and drop death through it. Gothas which flutter like butterflies, drop and rise again, dart by the air barrage and dodge around bursting shrapnel.

Suddenly, from out of nowhere, as it seemed, distinct from the drumming of our own fire, there came a whizzing, with a piercing shriek, a momentary flash of flame, a mounting rush of air and earth and water, a clattering rumble. Two seven roomed houses had collapsed like a pack of built up cards before a breath—a crater lurked unevenly in the roadway. There were groans and cries and silence.

It seemed only a minute had passed when a softly padding ambulance sped into view—a dozen special constables, a couple of white coiffed nurses, a doctor, a Boy Scout on a bicycle, ready for an emergency message to go anywhere. The rescuers worked all night. All the occupants of the houses were injured—some may have lived. I did not hear.

We passed along further. We reached a suburb of good residential houses—solid brick and mortar, no flimsy timber, nor light stucco. Three stories high, the miniature gardens all well kept. There were four of these houses of a pattern, flat-roofed and somewhat close set.

The sky was clear overhead now, the drumfire seemed to die in the distance. A couple of our own airmen passed swiftly toward the red glow in the south. It was safe here—quiet, almost.

Another plane showed a rough outline, a searchlight fingered the sky with white tentacles, picked the craft up, then missed it. The white light sought and sought again gropingly. The sky line was smooth, even unbroken, but for a tiny grayish cloud. The cloud hovered above the block of houses but a moment, then it opened and dispersed, through its gray softness a black shape hurtled free. It hit the roof of the center building. We stopped in our strides—stunned.

A heap of smoking bricks lay huddled across four neatly trimmed garden patches. A flame flickered up a moment, then flickered out. A white, drawn face appeared and motioned for aid. The beams had offered a precarious shelter as they fell by forming a cave like passage. Somehow six people were crushed and tumbled in the one small section. Heaven alone knows how they lived.

Ten minutes went by, half an hour, and the fragrant odor of hot coffee rose on the night air as a V. A. D. sister handed in cups of stimulant and food to those pinned beneath the wreckage. Some one held a cup to the lips of an imprisoned woman of maybe 80 summers; her hands were crushed close to the shaking old body, she could not free them.

"We are not frightened," the quavering old voice came bravely up to the ears of the helpers.

The first aid workers passed on to another section. A young girl here, pinned close by masonry. Some one brought an oxygen cylinder and pumped air under the imprisoning beams. Day had dawned before the workers had made an impression upon the heaped up mass. The girl regained consciousness, smiled, said somethng inaudible to the workers, then closed her eyes again. She had "gone west" as bravely as any soldier.

"Wilful murder," said the coroner three years ago. Today we are asking that the world be made a decent place to live in.

I have not seen the later raids over England, over London. I have not learned the numbers of dead and injured. I have not reckoned up the number of nerve tortured children, frightened by an unknown, not to be understood, awfulness of noise and fire and horror.

What if such came to America? What is there to forbid? Have we enough aeroplanes to ward off a hostile attack? Have we need of concentrated air barrages? Are we sure that our naturalized neighbor, with his interest in aircraft, is not our enemy?

The limits of this war are not reached yet. Frightfulness breeds frightfulness. Out of gas have come worse gasses—from liquid fire cylinders have come liquid fire shells. Ravished women became mutilated women. Conquered Belgium became denuded of trees, of houses, of earth itself in places where the rock bottom of its foundation shows through.

There is danger in a too great security. There is danger in too great confidence without an equal preparedness.

Only one thing stands out clear as a high ideal for all liberty loving people—"this world must be made a decent place to live in." While the German star is in the ascendant the world is not a decent place.

VACATIONS AND HEALTH.

JOSLIN advises diabetics to take their vacations camping in the woods. He has observed that vacations in the woods make them more capable of resisting infections and give them more bodily vigor. The same can be said of men who suffer from many other ailments.

One questions the advantage of a vacation to a well man. The gain is considerable as regards his physical well being, for it increases his vigor and resistance, but the chief gain is in mental efficiency. The break in routine, in monotony, rests the mind and freshens it. But in taking a vacation a man increases the hazards of life.

Few health resorts follow standard practices for the prevention of preventable diseases. The keepers of Maine resorts are pioneers in this particular. A few years ago they joined with the state board of health in having a sanitary survey made of the resorts in that state. The inspector, Mr. Turner, was welcomed at every resort in the state. His suggestions were acted upon at once. When the vacation season approaches they advertise the conditions found by the inspector, offering them as a guarantee that a vacation spent in a Maine resort is safe. Within a few years other states in which the resort industry is one of the most profitable will follow the example set by Maine.

The principal danger is from typhoid fever. A considerable portion of vacationists develop typhoid within ten days after coming home or cut short their vacations because of the oncoming of the disease. Some develop diarrhœas that are really masked typhoid. Typhoid can be certainly guarded against. The best plan is to be vaccinated. Some city health departments now vaccinate against typhoid free of charge. Most state departments of health supply free vaccine.

Vaccination against typhoid fever consists of three hypodermic injections. The injections are given at ten day intervals—therefore, three weeks is required to complete vaccination. Most of those who take it are not sick at all. Many are "achy" and "generally ailing" for one day following one of the three injections. Occasionally a fever of 102 degrees or about lasts for one day. A warm bath is the only treatment required for this fever. Several million soldiers and sailors have been vaccinated against typhoid during the last two years and no accidents have happened. It is safer than riding on the train. Vaccination protects against typhoid fever for three years on the average. Many are protected longer and some less long.

There is a disease rather closely allied to typhoid fever called paratyphoid. Our soldiers along the Rio Grande two years ago had some paratyphoid fever, though they had no typhoid. One New York regiment had many cases of paratyphoid. The bacillus which causes this fever is frequently found in meat. If a prospective vacationist cannot be certain about the quality of the meat he will get he had better be vaccinated against paratyphoid as well as typhoid. Our soldiers are now vaccinated against both diseases and they are free from both, have been for a year, and will continue to be.

Paratyphoid is mixed with typhoid in vaccinating those who wish to be protected from both diseases. The double vaccination is done in exactly the same way as that done against a single disease. The only drawback is that the reaction is somewhat greater, but the millions of soldiers who have taken the double injection have not found the reaction especially troublesome.

If a vacationist has not had time to be vaccinated he can be reasonably safe by disinfecting the drinking water and sticking to canned milk or milk powder. A large camping party will do well to provide themselves with a Lyster bag. This is a cloth water bag devised by Dr. Lyster of the United States army and in general use by our army when on the march. A Lyster bag folds into a small space when not in use. It is 20x28 inches and weighs seven and one-half pounds; when filled with water it weighs 330 pounds, since it holds forty gallons of water. The bag is suspended and filled with water and the water is sterilized by the addition of a tube (fourteen to fifteen grams) of hypochlorite of lime. The water stands for fifteen to thirty minutes and it is ready for use. The bag has four faucets at its lower end. A package of sixty calcium hypochlorite tubes ready for use weighs ten ounces.

Some city health departments supply their citizens going on vacations with hypochlorite fixed for use in an ordinary water bucket. The instructions given by the Chicago health department with the tablets supplied by them are: "Dissolve one tablet by crushing between the fingers in one quart of water in an ordinary Mason jar which should be sealed with an air tight cap. The jar is then shaken, contents allowed to settle, and should be stored in a cool, dark place. This is the stock solution and under average conditions will last about one week, after which it should be renewed.

"To prepare water for drinking, take a teaspoonful of the clear stock solution, avoiding the sediment, to one eight ounce glass of drinking water; allow it to stand for five minutes, when it is ready for drinking, and will be safe. If it is suspected that the water is heavily polluted two teaspoonfuls of the stock solution should be used to each eight ounce glass of water. If it is desired to make up a daily supply ready for use, it can be done by adding four teaspoons of the stock solution to each quart of water."

A more convenient water sterilizing chemical is halozone. This comes in tablets. One or two of these tablets dissolved in a two gallon bucket of water will kill all ordinary disease producing bacteria contained therein if the water is left for thirty minutes. Those who prefer not to use a chemical can disinfect with heat. It is not necessary to boil water to sterilize it. Water heated until it simmers will not contain live typhoid bacilli.

A very satisfactory method followed by some campers is to drink weak tea. Water hot enough to extract the flavor from tea leaves is sterile, at least so far as typhoid and diarrhoeal diseases are concerned. A canteen filled with tea can be taken on a day's fishing trip. It will be more palatable than water and it will be much safer, of course, than water drawn from the woods' streams. There is considerable hazard in drinking water from clear woods streams, the clear, rapid brook waters being especially dangerous.

If the water in resort places is bad the milk is worse. The problem solves itself for the man who goes into the woods camping. No liquid milk is available and it is canned milk or none. Milk powder is especially in favor now. It weighs less, keeps better, and requires no can. A good milk powder mixed with the proper quantity of water makes a whole milk with the taste, odor, body, and richness of good cooked milk. It is safe.

Ordinary evaporated and sweetened milk is safe, wholesome, and convenient for campers. Sweetened condensed has the advantage as a coffee milk of combining sugar and milk. The vacationist who stays in a resort hotel had better stick to boiled milk unless he knows the milk supply has been properly pasteurized. It is not necessary to boil milk to make it safe if the taste of boiled milk is objected to. The pasteurizing temperature is about 50 degrees lower than the boiling point. Milk which has been heated until it begins to boil lightly at the edge of the vessel will be free from live typhoid bacilli. Hot milk added to the coffee in place of cream will be safe. When a milk supply is dangerous the cream therefrom is doubly so. When cream rises it carries with it more than its proportion of typhoid and other bacteria.

FLIES—Campers can keep flies away by using light creosote oil. Some of the men in the trenches keep flies out of their huts by hanging bagging over the door and pouring creosote oil on the bagging from time to time. On account of the nearness of decomposing bodies of different kinds, flies are very abundant in the trenches. Of the various repellents this is the best. A lighter oil will vaporize more readily and will therefore require more frequent sprinkling. Heavier oils are less volatile and are therefore less efficient, but they "last" longer. Those who go to resorts will do well to avoid those that are unscreened. If there are many flies in the house it is a sign of uncleanliness and general carelessness. Screens and cleanliness will suffice to keep a house reasonably free from flies.

MOSQUITOES—Even though the mosquitoes of a resort be not infected and therefore incapable of causing malaria, they are a nuisance. Campers can get some peace by using freely the following repellent:

Oil of citronella................	1 ounce
Spirits of camphor............	1 ounce
Oil of cedar......................	½ ounce

I presume light creosote oil would be equally or more effective. The odor can be made less disagreeable by adding oil of citronella to it. Enough mosquito bar or netting should be carried to the woods to cover the bed and to provide head covering for use in the daytime. The mosquito netting must be so arranged over the bed that the body does not come in contact with it. A mosquito does not care to get through a bar if he can bite through it. The resort visitor will find that fly screens will not stop mosquitoes. Screening to stop mosquitoes must be at least sixteen mesh and eighteen meshes to the inch is even a better standard.

GNATS—In the woods gnat bites are sometimes more troublesome than those of mosquitoes. Repellents and netting are in a measure protective.

Ordinary insect bites require no treatment other than to wash them with soda water or with witch hazel.

RED BUGS—A soap and water bath will wash off all the red bugs that have not dug in. Red bugs that are just digging in can be removed with the point of a needle. To kill those more deeply imbedded rub the bites with salted butter.

SNAKES—Very few snakes are poisonous and fewer still carry a dose of poison that is dangerously large. The best policy when you meet a snake is to go your way and let the snake go its way. The chances are at least three out of four that any snake you meet is of a species that does good rather than harm to man. If bitten by a snake use a knife to enlarge the wound. Let it bleed freely. It is safe to suck the wound. If any permanganate of potash is at hand make a strong solution of it and wash the wound with it. Do not take whisky for snake bite. The probability is that more than half of the few people who die from snake bite die from alcohol. The custom is to give something like a pint of whisky. This is a fatal dose for many people. The only good that whisky does a person who has been bitten by a snake is to make him drink enough that he does not suffer from fear. It does more than enough harm to offset this. The information that snake bite is not particularly dangerous should be fairly widespread by this time and fear should not do the harm that it once did.

Bites of tarantulas, centipedes, scorpions, and Gila monsters do not require any particular treatment. Perhaps a soda water wash will help some. The bites should be made to bleed.

ORDINARY WOUNDS—Paint with iodine. Get the iodine into the wound itself as well as on the skin around it. Do not put on too much dressing. A light first aid dressing is enough. It is well to change this daily or every other day. Wounds need some air, as the experiences of this war have taught us. To leave a first aid dressing on for several days may be dangerous. Dichloramin-T in eucalyptus oil is a better applications for wounds. It will not mix with water.

MOSQUITO CONTROL.

We have been furnished with this letter relating to a method of mosquito control vouched for by an authority:

O. A. C., Experiment Station, Corvallis, Ore.—That the western newt, or water dog, is an effective means of getting rid of mosquitoes is pointed out by Dr. Asa C. Chandler in an Oregon agricultural college experiment station bulletin entitled "The Western Newt or Water Dog, a Natural Enemy of Mosquitoes."

One or two water dogs in each rain barrel will be sufficient to keep them clear of mosquito larvae has been conclusively shown, according to Dr. Chandler. The only requisites for their sucessful exploitation in this capacity are that the barrels be free from oil, tar, brine, or other injurious substances. The water dogs do not injure the water in any way. Reservoirs, mill ponds, and garden pools could almost invariably be stocked successfully with water dogs in climates in which they will thrive.

THE COST OF THE WAR

[From the Passing Show, London.]

NO FRUIT; NO SUGAR.

Chicago, July 22.—[To the Friend of the People.]—The food commission rules that in addition to the three pounds of sugar per person per month, each home is allowed twenty-five pounds for canning. My grocer rules that I may have sufficient sugar to preserve fruit, provided I buy the fruit from him. Is this a case of Grocer vs. Government?

M. R.

Your grocer has no right to require a purchase of fruit when sugar is asked for preserving purposes. If he is able to supply you he cannot require you to purchase other goods with it. He need not sell it unless he wishes to do so, but cannot make its supply provisional on the purchase of other goods. If you will send his name to the United States food administration they will investigate the matter for you.

EXPATRIATION OF CITIZENS.

Chicago, July 22.—[To the Friend of the People.]—In what time does a naturalized citizen or an American citizen lose his citizenship if he resides abroad?

J. L.

The naturalization laws provide that when any naturalized citizen shall have resided for two years in the foreign state from which he came, or five years in any other foreign state, it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen and the place of his general abode shall be deemed his place of residence during said years. Provided, however, that such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States. An American citizen shall have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state. However, no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war.

SCREENS WERE REPAIRED.

Chicago, July 22.—[To the Friend of the People.]—The service building of the new municipal contagious disease hospital, 3026 South California avenue, is not provided with half enough screens. The department of health is lax in its attention to this condition.

CONSTANT READER.

We found it necessary to send a number of screens from the municipal contagious disease hospital back to the factory for repairs. These screens were returned promptly and are now in place.

RENEWED BY IMPLICATION.

Chicago, July 24.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—What recourse has a landlord against a tenant who moves out before his lease has expired? 1. Can he garnishee his wages and (2) if so what amount is exempt? 3. If the lease reads from May 1 to April 30 and after its expiration no new lease is made out, are you still under the terms of the old lease or (4) only renting from month to month?

J. G. H.

1. Yes, after getting judgment.
2. Fifteen dollars a week, if he is head of a family.
3. The old lease is renewed by implication.

INHERITANCE TAX.

Centralia, Ill., July 24.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—1. How much property can a person inherit without being liable to inheritance tax? 2. Are larger amounts subject to a larger rate? 3. How is the amount of tax determined? 4. With only one heir, is it necessary to employ an attorney to probate a will? The estate has no debts.

A. V. W.

1. $20,000 when the relationship is close.
2. Yes.
3. We cannot answer so general a question. State your facts.
4. Depends on the facts.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

LEGAL SHARE OF SPOUSE.

Chicago, July 24.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—A widower with one child marries a widow with one child. Both have property and bank accounts in their own name. In case of death of either party, how would the property be divided? Could a will be made leaving all to his or her child?

J. F. H.

The surviving spouse would take one-third of the personalty and a life interest in one-third of the realty. The child of the deceased would take the balance of the estate. The spouse's share could not be decreased by will.

MUST RESIDE IN ILLINOIS.

Chicago, July 24.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Can I be executor of a will probated in Cook county and not reside in the county during probate? I would like to fulfill the office, but must be in Iowa to attend to my business.

G. F. S.

You cannot serve as an Illinois executor while residing in Iowa.

RAISING THE DRAFT AGE.

Chicago, July 25.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Among a few perhaps there is a feeling of the "cold feet" order against raising the draft age to take in those over 40 to 50. Patriots never figure that way, at least Andy Jackson at New Orleans cut out the age limit, for they all looked alike to him if they could pull a trigger.

In my opinion there are plenty of people about the 40 to 50 age limit right here in Chicago simply aching to get into action, but are barred by the rules. In 95 per cent of the cases the men are competent, pnysically and intellectually, to do as Gen. Jackson did—deliver.

"Is life so sweet and peace so dear as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?" When Patrick Henry announced that doctrine he struck a chord that will never cease ringing, in this country at least.

Lift the draft age to 50 by all means, and the Patrick Henry-Andy Jackson sentiment will smite the enemy like a blast from heaven.

J. F. COSTELLO.

PROHIBITION; ANOTHER VIEW.

Davenport, Ia., July 21.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—The Literary Digest of July 20 has a statement showing how the revenue taxes were distributed. In checking over this statement I find that $3,133,891,368 was raised in the wet or non-prohibition states. The prohibition states raised a little over $50,000,000. Would it not be a parody on justice to have the states which raise less than one-seventh of our revenue for war purposes force the states which are raising six-sevenths of our revenue to accept legislation that is not only bigoted and un-American but absolutely harmful to their interests? It looks to a man up a tree as though the people who are paying the bills should at least be allowed to enact legislation in their own states for their own interests.

J. E. MOORE.

"THE HARMLESS, NECESSARY CAT."

Chicago, July 25.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—There are no women who really dislike cats, but it has become fashionable to protest, and to be different from the average and common run of women, who naturally love and protect all small creatures; if it wasn't cats it would probably be a campaign against gophers living in holes and an attempt to induce them to build bungalows or something equally silly.

Long observation has taught me that although it is cat nature to try to catch birds and small game, they are rarely successful. Long domesticity has dulled their ability for anything but the ever-present rat or mouse. And while they answer to the old instinct to spring at all small, moving game, which was born of their necessities in the wild state, they rarely catch them. They can be taught easily what they will not be allowed to attack. They are quite as easily trained as dogs.

MRS. BERNICE CAMPBELL.

AND HE SAYS HE'S A BACHELOR.

Chicago, July 25.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—According to the puerile argument of one of your correspondents, I judge him to be an inveterate bachelor and advise him to remain so, for it is obvious he has not gumption enough to run a peanut stand, let alone a home. Is there anything more despicable or that should incur the contempt of a community more than a man who, sound in body and mind, remains a bachelor solely for "self-interest," and that he may get the most out of life? It is an insult to the character of the married man to debase him to the level of such a degenerate. Married men do not wish the single ones to fight their battles. They are veterans at that game and can well look after themselves, even in the present emergency.

A single man, able to fight, and with neither kith nor kin dependent on him, who will stand aside while his married brother fills the breach is no man at all and his plea of "simple justice" is only to hide his cowardice. The majority of bachelors never were any good either to themselves or any one else. If the freedom of the world depended on them we should be fighting a lost cause and the home fires would cease to burn.

A BACHELOR.

THE CASE OF THE MARINES.

Chicago, July 25.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I note with interest the article of F. Brand in regard to the lads who joined the marines and have seen service all along in France. My brother also enlisted in May, arrived in France in October, saw service in the battles which the marines have been engaged in, and was wounded by shrapnel. He is now convalescing in a base hospital in northern France.

Anybody who understands the marines' training will surely know that their training fits them admirably for any fighting position in the army. Why not give them a chance to become officers?

WASTE ON SOUTH WATER STREET.

Chicago, July 24.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I am the mother of four bright, healthy, growing children, two boys and two girls; coming America!

My husband is a New York Central engineer.

We are both very economical, yet because of the terrible prices asked for cherries and berries I have not been able to put up one quart of fruit for next winter. In conversation with a young man this morning who goes to South Water street to buy fruit, I was told that when the market becomes flooded with cherries and berries on Saturday evening, rather than sell them at cost and spoil the market, this perfectly good fruit is either thrown into the lake or dumped into barrels and covered with ashes. You can pay their price or let it alone.

How long must we suffer this thing to go on?

MRS. T. G. OLIVER.

AVIATION

By Louis Albert Lamb

AVIATION has completely captured the popular imagination everywhere. Amazement over the "miracle of flying" has given place to a curious aerial cult. Popular instinct has "sensed" the fact that the fighting pilots are much more than daredevil acrobats and entertainers. No longer are they regarded as high trapeze performers, giving thrills to circus crowds. They represent more than the old garden variety of exhibition "heroism." These men of the aviation have reëstablished the age of Chivalry on a modern basis of civic duty. They are the tutors and trainers who are teaching mankind everywhere the principles of the higher democracy, which is to rule the regenerated world. The subconscious mind of society has grasped the significance of the pilot aviator, braving the anti-aircraft fire and facing terrible death for the sake of his humble comrades in the trenches and gun emplacements below. He represents the ideal of human solidarity—of reciprocal service from the highest to the lowest stations of human life.

Only a few days ago THE TRIBUNE announced the formation of a society composed of men and women having kinsmen in the American aviation. The names in that membership list were of "strains" famous in the creation of a metropolis out of the marshes. The new heroes of the aerial service are sired and mothered from the dominant stock, and the prevalent strains which in less than seventy years have changed America from a primitive "prospect" to an overwhelming world power; from a frontier camp to a capital of civilization. The very patronymics of the flyers tell a great story!

It is unscientific, of course, to note a fact and generalize on it. The chances are that any solitary fact, however interesting, will prove to be only a coincidence. But when a fact is found to branch out over four great nations, with oceans and Alps between, it is worth examining. Thus a careful study of the personnel of aviation in America, England, France, and Italy affords heavy, concurrent evidence in favor of a vital conclusion:

The aviation service is the most potent agency now at work in the "selective" process which is producing the types of character that the regeneration of society urgently demands.

It really seems as if democracy, at last certain of its enthronement throughout the civilized world, had thus early developed a system whereby the best men for the communal service may be unerringly chosen from all orders of society.

* *

THIS, at least, is certain, that the aviation branch finds and puts in the intense light of universal scrutiny the men that scientific methods of selection designate as endowed with the highest qualities of physical stability, courage, intelligence, initiative, resource, ingenuity, executive power, and fidelity to trusts and responsibilities.

That this is true requires only the mention of some of the great names in the air service of all nations: Lufbery, Chapman, Thaw, McConnell, Rockwell; Bishop, Wright, Campbell; Guynemer, Nungesser, Fonck, Chaput; D'Annunzio. For the sake of scientific impartiality one might add some other names: Immelmann, Von Boelke, Von Richthofen, and Von Hausen—even their French enemies and pilot conquerors accord them the praise due to valor and patriotism.

There is included in the subject a great domain of promising psychologic study. Dr. Gustave Le Bon, the French scientist, has made large contributions to the mentality of the war. He has developed a convincing theory that the defeat of Pan-Germanism was implied from the beginning in the utterly fallacious reasoning of the Germans in moral, sentimental, military, and economic matters. From the minute the Hun hordes passed Aix-la-Chapelle every cruelty it has committed, every gas bomb it has fired, every ship "spurlos versenkt," every obus shot at a crucifix virgin, or cathedral, and every treaty it has regarded as a "chiffon de papier" has been a "flunk mark" against German scholarship in the department of psychology.

* *

IN exact opposition to this defect of the German mind stands out in brilliant impasto the quite marvelous genius of the civilized nations fighting in the allied line. And in nothing have they revealed more indisputably their title to democracy than in their dual application of psychology, in a reciprocal relation touching aviation on the one hand and societary problems on the other. The demos everywhere is giving to the aviation the "firstlings of its sons, void of spot or blemish." The aviation, by all odds the most rigorously selected élite that the world ever saw, is developing a societary consciousness of a most exalted quality and holding it for the service of the democracy which is henceforth to dominate the affairs of all peoples. And the central spirit of that selective body of the most perfect manhood civilization has produced is will to serve—hot in the air only, but everywhere, everyhow, everywhen, unto the death!

Pierre-Maurice Masson, writing to Paul Hazard the day before the last, April 16, 1916, expressed the new frame of mind—the new psychology, which is finding its typical development in the aerial service:

> The Sorbonne may go to the devil, and permissions, too. I no longer care to do anything but my strict duty. It is a hard and a beautiful calling, but I would not trade my place in command of a company for all the sinecures at the rear.

Worthy maxim companion for Guynemer's famous rejoinder:

> Yes, there is a limit to human endurance—a limit that one must always exceed. As long as a man has given less than everything he has given nothing.

In passing it is valid to ask why the name of Georges Guynemer was inscribed on the walls of the Pantheon by a rising vote of the French nation assembled in the deputies? Even the closest friends of his lifetime concede that he was one hero among ten thousand heroes—all so great that to single out one is almost an affront to all the rest. But there has not been heard a solitary voice of dissent to the apotheosis of Guynemer. There is his name and his last magnificent citation, with the approving imprimatur of the French people, from president down to gavroche!

By what patent of nobility does he rank with Lazare Carnot, Louis Pasteur, Victor Hugo, and Marceau?

The patent of his nobility was his will to serve—as charman, as floor sweep, as porter, as oiler, as water boy. His will to serve, not merely his ideality, la patrie, but to serve the humblest, lousiest, muddiest poilu in the trenches—the poilu who never has a chance to get the palms that he merits, more perhaps than the aviator merits all he picks from the topmost branches of the tree of glory!

That is the secret of the glorious nimbus that wreathes the name and memory of Georges Guynemer and adds splendor to the radiance of the Pantheon at Paris. The will to serve—not the German will to power!

Here's to the aviators! And to every one a perfect landing!

BOOKS

By James Branch Cabell

PUT to a jury of twelve average persons, the question, What is the first requirement of a novelist? would probably result in a hung verdict. The less prosaic would answer, "A publisher," and the ten dullards would prattle of "original ideas" quite as though they discoursed of possibilities. And the whole dozen would be right enough: for the publisher is really indispensable, whereas, from the point of view of commerce—and really esthetics are in no wise concerned—our modern novel is nothing if it have not some superficial novelty to arrest the roving and languid interest with which all people (turned pessimists by experience) hear about new fiction. . . . Yet the humane laws of the land compel no man to read another's book. Emboldened by this fact, the general reader demands, with his visage too betraying such esthetic zeal as may fairly be described as characteristic:

"Interest me, against my natural inclinations, in your tainted nonsense, and I will buy such novels of yours as I cannot borrow. I do not at all go in for reading and that sort of thing, when I can find anything else to do; but once in a while there is a vacant half hour I have to get rid of somehow. At such times I am willing to put you on an equal footing with the evening paper and the cinematograph, since I reserve the right to quit any one of you the moment I find the entertainment distasteful. Now go ahead now with your fooleries: and remember I don't care to be shocked or elevated or instructed or harrowed, or otherwise taken out of myself; and let us have no 'literary' nonsense, because I resent the impudence of people who allude to matters that I do not understand."

* *

IT seems little enough to ask in return for a whole 10 per cent commission on a book that costs the general reader, very often, as much as his cravat. Still, it is a mercantile offer, which every true artist would meet with contempt if only it were possible to discharge the monthly accounts with the same coinage. But, unfortunately, most books are less a question of art than of bread and butter. The average fiction writer, at all events, can afford to look down upon the public only, as the acrobat looks down upon the tightrope, to ascertain whither it leads, and to make sure that it will support him. . . . Nor is it impeccable etiquette to blow one's own trumpet; but each musician undoubtedly makes the most noise with his own instrument. So in the Vanity Fair of Current Letters each tradesman makes bold to commend his especial wares. . . . The attractions are many and various. Here is Mr. Booth Tarkington dispensing, past doubt, the best confectionery in the market. At the familiar stand Mr. W. D. Howells is still making tintypes, and guaranteeing a perfect likeness. Mr. Bernard Shaw, of course, is in charge of that intriguing exhibition, the Crazy House, where everything is exhibited upside down; and in the fortune teller's tent, recently vacated by Mr. H. G. Wells, is prophesying this week, I forget who. Yonder row of pavilions is devoted to a display of precocious orphans, and you are warned not to enter with less than two pocket handkerchiefs. Those who are interested by the sport of throwing missiles at a colored man can be diverted, to your heart, at any number of stalls (conducted by such dissimilar personages as ambassadors, newspaper correspondents, retired tutors, and ex-governesses to the nobility). Over yonder a very considerable section of the fair grounds is set apart for the performances commended by Col. Roosevelt. And, of course, there are any number of tents with flamboyant placards stating that the exhibits within concerns the highest and most exclusive society, and narrowly escaped being forbidden by the police. . . . It is a motley bazaar, and to make any choice therein cannot but puzzle the visitor with limited resources for his fairing.

NOW all this is very new and original, indeed, and the general reader ought to be satisfied. For it is at his demand the age thus pullulates with reading matter for the nonliterary. Still, all progress brings its attendant problems; and in this case one honestly wonders what is to become of our old literary masterpieces, now that people decline to read them. For there can be no earthly doubt that to a steadily augmenting majority the time honored bulk of English literature means only a forgotten "course" at school or college, along with the calculus and botany and other matters there is no longer any need to worry over, until it comes to helping the children with their lessons. . . .

As a case in point, one may well consider that especial glory of English letters, the much vaunted plays of the Elizabethan and Jacobean dramatists, which justly rank so high in literature that few can endure the altitude. Here for the asking is, in cold earnest, "the greatest part of the greatest period of the greatest literature of the world"; and to extol this quite priceless literary heritage of ours as animated, impassioned, brilliant, and inimitable, would be to deal in textbook truisms; but to describe it as generally pleasant reading would be an absurdity. To the most of us such portions as we can understand at all sound uncommonly like nonsense: and throughout the flavor of unreality in these dramas is even stronger than their depressing odor of antiquity. Our instinctive attitude toward them becomes much the same as that of Tom Tolliver toward the Latin language. Yet managers once with perfect justice classed these plays as "light popular stuff," and the jokes we puzzle out with the aid of commentaries and footnotes were put in for the especial benefit of the uneducated. . . . Then there is the Spectator, which time has transmuted from a popular periodical into a pest. And all the productions of Mrs. Aphra Behn, the seventeenth century Elinor Glyn, and of Samuel Richardson, who was the Florence Barclay of his day—these, too, assist to prompt avoidance of the well selected library. . . .

For time has erected barriers more or less serious before all the "popular" reading matter of yester-year. From this side of the fence the prospect seems attractive enough, and for Cervantes, let us say, nearly everybody has a civil superlative. . . . But the actual climbing of the palings, to the extent of reading famous books instead of the books about them, provokes inevitable disillusion. The moon is beyond question interesting when glanced at through a moderate sized telescope, but actually to sojourn on its surface might prove a trifle cheerless.

Thus every self-respecting person will assure you, with whatever pronunciatory divergence, that Don Quixote is one of the great characters of fiction: and past doubt the ingenious gentleman of La Mancha is a delightful companion, in anticipation. What could be more diverting than the adventure of Mambrino's helmet, and that perfectly killing affair of the windmills? And where will you find nowadays such wonderful character drawing as in Sancho Panza? You thrill to the notion of a jaunt through old world Spain in company with these two immortal types of humanity, concerning whom, as you glowingly remembered, it has been strikingly observed by somebody or other that such and such is the case. . . . So you begin the book, in an atmosphere of genial goodfellowship which vanishes long before the end of the fourth chapter. For it is an unfortunate fact that, so far as most of us are concerned, the essayists have written much more entertainingly about Don Quixote than Cervantes did. And when you fair mindedly consider that noble structure which commentators and occasional writers have erected with the works of Rabelais as foundation, you will hardly contend that the most attractive portion of the building is the cellar.

ALAN SEEGER

By Washington Van Dusen

No beauty could escape his loving eyes,
  Not even ruthless war could hide from view
  The smiling fields where crimson poppies grew,
Nor mar the sunset's rose and purple dyes;
He watched a vine clad slope, with glad surprise
  To hear grapepickers sing, although they knew
  Just on the other side, the cannon threw
Their deadly shells and woke the startled skies.

But over all that made Champagne so fair,
  He saw the grandeur of the field of strife,
Exulting in the cause that placed him there,
  He felt a calm, mid all the carnage rife,
And faced the battle with a spirit rare,
  "For death may be more wonderful than life."

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

JULY-AUGUST

AUGUST.

THE cicada is back in the white oak and the woods become a temple of repose. The song of the thrush was that of the melancholy of ardor and ecstasy, of hope at sunset, of prospects at dawn. When nights were purple curtains drawn upon days which would have more happiness in prospect than they had in experience, the thrush sang for the melancholy of that hope which is insistent but suspects that it is futile.

August hushes all the vibrant song which is intimation of a glorious futility purpling a rubicund hope. Futility is the measure of life; a denial of this its essence. The cicada sounds acceptance, a small voice of portentous insistence, filling the warm August night with its assertion that the green leaf goes to the brown, the flower to seed, the arc to its closed circle.

The cicada's voice is the plaintive note of subscription, the note of acquiescence. Life accepts its measure. Accomplishment has no ecstasy but is serene. Experience is a full volume.

LEAVES FROM THE NOTEBOOK

Of Henry J. Allen

UNLESS you saw it happen, you wouldn't know what it means for an American soldier to be visited by an American woman in a hospital over here. He has been lying there in the tedium of his pain for some days, with nothing to think of but the heart things of life. Then, when he is most depressed by the thought of the 3,000 miles that separate him from home, when he feels there is nothing left in the world but brown uniforms, tin hats, gas masks, canned goods, and hospitals, an American woman, with a home communication brassard on her arm, looking wholesome and cool, drops in as though it were the most natural thing in the world for her to be there. To him she's a vision, and he treats her accordingly.

She sits down and just chats for a while. She wants to know if she can do anything for him. If he is in great pain she adjusts his pillow and her hand rests for a moment on his hot head. If he is able to be talked to she brings out a thing that hung on her arm when she entered. It is called a "surprise bag" by some, a "comfort bag" by others.

I've seen both men and officers go into raptures over the silly thing. I've known the meanness of envying a man his enjoyment of it. He never knows what he'll find in it. Neither does the woman who brings it. It has been made up at home, maybe by some Red Cross chapter. Those are the best. When the Red Cross runs short of the home grown ones it engages some organization like the A. F. F. W. to make up an extra supply. Just now this organization is making 20,000 for us. The Red Cross furnishes the money, and these women buy the supplies and donate the labor of making the bags. They put in everything from a spool of thread to a pack of cards.

It is a glad sight to see a man dive his hand in. He is a little sheepish about it at first, because we are looking at him. The first thing he grabs may be a tooth brush, wrapped up in tissue paper, with baby ribbon on it. He's more gratified than he can say. I've never seen such longing for tooth brushes. Generally, when the man arrives at the hospital from the battle line he has lost his kit. It disappeared somewhere, either at the first dressing station where his wounds received first aid, or while he was being taken unconscious from the field, or when they redressed him at the hospital—at any rate, it's gone. I've never been so impressed in all my life with the innate cleanliness of the American soldier man as when I've witnessed his joy over finding a tooth brush in his comfort bag.

He has forgotten his shyness by the time he has laid it tenderly on the bed cover. Then he reaches again. He may bring up a linen towel, a pocket comb, a bar of soap, a safety razor, a pair of socks, a new pipe and some pipe cleaners, a package of tobacco, a package of cigarets, a cake of chocolate, a box of matches, a paper of needles attached to a spool of thread, a deck of cards, some safety pins, a pocket Testament, a pocket knife, a lead pencil, a pad of paper accompanied by a package of envelopes, a box of smoking tobacco, some collar buttons or shoe strings—all these things and more I've seen emerge from one comfort bag, to the speechless joy of the boy who twenty minutes before was half dead from boredom and homesickness.

* *

SOMETIMES there will be a riot of comfort bags delivered in one of the wards where there are a number of soldiers, and they sit up in bed waving their discoveries, occasionally swapping with each other various contents. I've seen a deck of cards traded for a pocket Testament. I've witnessed a full grown man barter a pair of shoe strings for a package of tobacco—and I've gone away realizing the simple greatness of the idea of comfort bags. God bless the mortal who thought of it. I don't know her name, but I know it was a woman. And I hope they'll send us ship loads of them. We can use them. After the contents have been properly bestowed they hang the bag at the head of the bed for the various personal belongings of the patient. It becomes his dressing case, his "bureau drawer," his clothes cabinet, his private desk. It signifies everything to him that he left at home, and he loves the simple calico thing and hopes he'll never, never lose it.

After a while the woman who first called on him comes back and brings along a fountain pen and some Red Cross stationery, and offers to write a letter for him, telling his mother, his wife, or his sweetheart how brave he's been. Before she goes she happens to remember that she brought an orange for him. The Red Cross has just ordered several million oranges to be distributed in hospitals.

There are now several dozen women performing this service for the home communication bureau of the Red Cross. We are trying to place enough women in the service to provide one for each 1,000 beds in every American hospital.

We are also placing a personnel of French speaking American women in the French hospitals to which our American boys are being evacuated.

The introduction of the plan to brigade American troops with French troops has brought us a real problem. The great line of base hospitals which we had builded in other portions of France when the plan was to place the entire American force in charge of an American sector will be used, of course, but for the present many of our men will have first to be taken from the field to French hospitals, whence they will be evacuated to the base hospitals when their wounds are sufficiently recovered to allow the longer transfer.

Therefore, we now find very frequently some American lad who has been brought, along with his wounded French comrade, to a French hospital and placed on an adjoining cot, where he soon realizes how much he needs the gift of French speech. The plan of the Red Cross is to place in French hospitals, as readily as possible, American women who speak French sufficiently to enable them to act as interpreters between the French nurse and the American boy, and to do whatever other acts of service they can for the American boy. It is embarrassing for an American boy to be in a hospital where he cannot make himself intelligible. It is distressing when you are pleading for less covering to get more covering; or when you are asking for another pillow to have the one you already possess taken away, through the most kindly intention misapplied. The other day an American boy in a French hospital pulled me down beside him and said:

"For heaven's sake, tell 'em I want some plain drinking water, not cough medicine. For three days they have brought me cough medicine every time I've asked for water. And, say," he added, "tell 'em I want some pills, do you understand; some old fashioned pills—p-i-l-l-s," he spelled it out emphatically; "like mother used to give me when I was sick. I asked that wild Frenchman for some the other day and he brought me more cough medicine."

* *

NEVERTHELESS, the French are tender and gracious with our men. Their system of treatment differs from ours often, but there is no element of conscious neglect. At one of the places visited this week the Red Cross has just begun to introduce American women as nurses' aids into French hospitals. This was necessary, because it became an increasingly difficult matter to care for American wounded in French hospitals with no English speaking nurses. So the American staff decided to liberalize its attitude about women in hospitals to the extent of allowing the Red Cross to supply some nurses' aids.

When we came over here a few months ago the American standard of nussing requirements was so high that the supply of nurses necessarily fell way below the standard. A woman might have been a very good practical nurse, but she couldn't get into the American army service unless she were a graduate. It had to be done just exactly so. Able doctors from civil life, who had been accustomed to use as aids women who had not taken graduate training but who had valuable experience, talked about the "nurse trust" and prophesied that it would have to be liberalized.

But the army medical staff at Washington was obdurate. It was set in its ways. We went on setting up our base hospitals and getting ready to care for our wounded in a way that would do credit to the best porcelain lined, marble trimmed hospital in New York. Then came the sudden shift in military plans which sent our men into the line with French and British soldiers. There was a hurry up call for help, and a lot of women who had been begging for a chance to get into hospitals began to receive their opportunity. Now the Red Cross is gathering up nurses' aids, and they tell me the cheering news that back home the medical staff is taking more kindly to the idea.

THE GREAT FOCH

By Major E. Requin

FOCH has been for forty years the incarnation of the French military spirit. Through his teachings and his example he was the moral director of the French general staff before becoming the supreme chief of the allied armies. Upon each one of us he has imprinted his strong mark. We owed to him in time of peace that unity of doctrine which was our strength. Since the war we owe to him the highest lessons of intellectual discipline and moral energy.

Foch was especially known in peace time through his instruction at the Ecole Superieure de Guerre. As a professor, and then as director, he applied the method which consists in taking as the base of all strategical and tactical instruction the study of history—that is to say, field operations, orders given, actions, results, the criticisms to be made, and the instruction to be drawn from them. He also used concrete cases—that is to say, problems laid by the director on the map or on the actual ground according to a given general situation. By this intellectual training he accustomed the officers to solving all problems not by giving them ready made solutions but by accustoming them in finding the logical solution suitable to each individual case.

His mind was trained through so many years of study that no war situation could disturb him. In the most difficult ones he quickly pointed out the goal to be reached and the means to employ, and each one of us felt that it must be right. For it was during the difficult period of August and September, 1914, that Marshal Joffre realized what a valuable second Foch was to be to him. In the month of August, 1914, he commanded the Twentieth corps in Lorraine. He displayed such qualifications that three months later he was given the command of an army. It was at the moment when Joffre was preparing his maneuver of the Marne. Did Joffre already foresee the presentiment of the events which were to take place in the center of the French lines when he put in not so much new forces as a new force, the great chief that he had foreseen in Foch?

* *

ANYWAY, raising a few divisions from the Fourth and Fifth armies and reinforcing them by two divisions, the Forty-second and the Eighteenth, Marshal Joffre placed this new group under the leadership of Foch. It was upon this mass, first called "army detachment" and then the Ninth army, that the German offensive broke a few days later. A general staff of five or six officers gathered in haste to start with, little or no working material, our notebooks, and a few maps. For my part, I slept the first night with the guard soldiers at their post in the village, to be sure not to lose the new general staff. Thus was the Ninth army created. One must imagine the difficulties of organization and command of an army formed in the course of the falling back movements which prepared the victory of the Marne, among the crowds of population fleeing before the horrors of invasion and incumbering the roads without the possibility of stopping for a single day! However, under Foch's authority the Ninth army soon learned that it existed, and acquired the realization of its own value. It felt itself moved by a will stronger than events, and when on Sept. 5 it stopped upon the heights northeast of Sezanne it was found ready for every effort and every sacrifice. Joffre's command to "win or die" found it as ready to die as its chief was determined to win.

The battle had gone on violently for three days. Upon the left the Forty-second division, engaged in a violent wood combat across the road from Sezanne to Champaubert, was disputing with the enemy the village of St. Prix. In the center the Moroccan division was holding firmly on the heights of Mondement. The Ninth corps, reinforced by a reserve division, stretched out on the right. But this army corps was already bending to keep in touch with the Eleventh corps, thrown back by a crushing attack of the enemy as far as the Gouguencon heights. All the reserves were engaged. The right of the army had only been halted by the strongest injunctions of Foch, and all was in a state of insecure equilibrium which the redoubled efforts of the enemy threatened to disturb.

Almost any other commander would have admitted himself beaten. But Foch did not wish to be. Gen. Foch had a most exact knowledge of what can be obtained from a French army. On the evening of Sept. 8 it was ordered by him to carry to the Tenth army corps the order to relieve the Forty-second division and to the Forty-second division the command to come and place itself facing east at the front of Ruisseau la Superbe—and to attack at 2 p.m. the right flank of the enemy, who already thought themselves victorious. This maneuver was more than daring. To any less exalted spirit than Foch it appeared impossible, so difficult was it in the midst of such a battle to withdraw from the combat a division entirely engaged, to make it cover a march back of the army front, and execute an attack whose decision could be forestalled, all in one day. But Foch had made this simple but disconcerting reasoning at once.

By pushing back the right wing of his army the enemy had presented one flank. It was into this flank that the Forty-second division would be thrown to determine the victory. The following day, the 10th, the enemy was in full retreat all along the front. The vanguard of the Ninth army penetrated into Fere Champenoise toward 9:30. An hour later, to mark the success and his will of pursuit, Gen. Foch installed his headquarters there among ruins filthy from the German occupation and orgies. Such was the part of Gen. Foch in the victory of the Marne.

Little Trouble for Car Owner in Tire Changes

CONCERNING 34x4S

Decatur, Ill., July 24.—[Automobile Editor of The Tribune.]—Announcement has been made that hereafter automobile tires will be made only in certain sizes. Can you advise by whom the selection of preferred sizes was made?

One of the sizes eliminated is 34x4. Am I correctly informed that this is one of the most widely used sizes on cars costing over $1,000? A reduction in the number of sizes is certainly a step in the right direction for all concerned, but why eliminate the most widely used size?

Seemingly this ruling against 34x4 tires means that I must "junk" my car or immediately lay in an unnecessary supply of new tires against future contingencies. W. J. E.

MOTOR AGE, which has been looking into the matter, finds that the tire sizes to be discontinued Nov. 1, 1918, are not used on any 1918 models, appear on only three 1917 models, and are employed on only about nine models dated from 1913 to 1916. The few sizes to be discontinued Nov. 1, 1919, are only occasionally used.

The great majority of car owners, therefore, will have tires provided for their present rims for more than two years, or until Nov. 1, 1920, when some of the more popular sizes are slated to go into the discard. Meanwhile, of course, the manufacturers will see to it that their new models conform to the eventual standard sizes.

The tire concerns generally are preparing to meet the needs of all car owners until the cars using discontinued sizes wear out or until the few remaining cars have their wheels changed to adapt them to the standard sizes.

Stock on hand and to be made in the next three and a half months will be more than enough to provide for the demand for a year. Even after this stock has been exhausted it will be possible to substitute straight side on clincher or quick detachable tires by using a bead filler strip to fill in the clinch.

In addition oversize tires may help owners of cars with discontinued tire sizes. To figure the oversize tire any given rim will take it is necessary simply to add one-half inch to the cross section and one inch to the diameter. As an example, suppose your tires are 32x3½ inches and you want oversize tires. By adding one inch to the diameter 33 is obtained and by adding one-half to the cross section we get four inches. Thus a 32x3½ rim will take a 33x4 inch oversize tire.

It is quite true, as W. J. E. points out, that the 34x4 size, to be discontinued in 1920, is widely used on present models. A glance at the list shows that they now appear on such popular makes as the Apperson, Buick, Chalmers, Chandler, Chevrolet, Haynes, Hudson, King, Kissel, Lexington, Mitchell, Moline-Knight, Moon, Nash, Oldsmobile, Reo, and Stearns.

The widely known 30x3 Ford size also is slated to go not later than Nov. 1, 1920.

When the supply of these sizes gives out, owners who depend on them and still have their present cars with unchanged rims, undoubtedly will have to do something about it—provided the present plan is still in effect. November, 1920, is a long way off, however, and modifications of the tire schedule are always possible.

No explanation has been vouchsafed as to why the 34x4 and 30x3 sizes were not included among those to be continued permanently.

The proposals as to what sizes should be discontinued were drawn up by the war service committee of the rubber industry. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the standards committee of the Society of Automotive Engineers, and the Tire and Rim association have all considered and approved the list of sizes as it stands.

Buying "On Time"

W. G. Tennant, who has been investigating the subject, finds that more than $1,750,000 worth of automobiles and motor trucks have been sold in the Chicago territory during the last year on the "deferred payment" plan. Mr. Tennant thinks that's too many.

MATTERS WORTH WORRYING ABOUT

[From Motor Life.]

A FIRE causes all sorts of inconveniences, not to mention actual danger. One motorist absent mindedly operated his car with retarded spark for a long distance, with the result that his exhaust pipe became red hot. Since it passed quite close to the floor boards, it eventually set them a-fire. By the time the little blaze was discovered and put out sufficient damage had been done to the electric wiring to make it necessary to tow the car home.

An accumulation of dirt in the mud pan was the cause of another fire which also injured the wiring so that the engine could not be operated. A mixture of mud and grease, which had gradually grown from the time the car was purchased, formed a dam just back of the flywheel. A leaking carburetor allowed sufficient fuel to collect so that a backfire, which occurred next time the engine was started, set it on fire. The moral is: Keep your mud pan clean.

A horn out of order might result in a hot roadside stop. This brings to mind the experience of a motorist who tried to pass another car at a bend on a fairly narrow road. As his horn was out of order he was unable to sound a warning. Just as the second car was beginning to pull up alongside the first the driver of the latter moved over to avoid a hole in the road and crowded the other car into the ditch.

Fortunately, the ditch was not deep and the accident was not serious. But it caused the delay and expense incident to obtaining a team of horses to pull the car out. It is almost certain that a horn in good working order would have prevented this accident. Later, when the owner examined the horn, he found that a few drops of oil remedied the trouble.

Tribune Tours

XVI.—To Fox Lake

FEW short runs out of Chicago can compare in general attractiveness with the trip to the Fox lake region. The roads are good for the most part, especially in dry weather, and are easily followed with the aid of new road signs recently placed by the Chicago Motor club. At different points along the way one encounters the emblems of the Chicago-Milwaukee road (a windmill in red and black), the lake to lakes route (an anchor in red and black), and the resort route (red and black with the letter R). For optional ways of getting there, the tourist may branch off from Half Day through Libertyville and Gray's lake, or follow the Milwaukee route—"Tribune" tour No. 13—to the Waukegan-Fox lake road which runs west through Gurnee and Lake Villa.

Open at Last.

After being closed to a greater or less extent for the better part of three years, the Blue Mound road between Milwaukee and Waukesha, Wis., again is open for traffic. The highway is the main outlet from Milwaukee to the west and is paved from the city to the county line with eighteen foot concrete.

Waukesha county undertook in 1915 to improve its portion of the road permanently, but encountered many obstacles, among them the bankruptcy of several contractors and the difficulty of bonding companies in completing the contracts because of the shortage of labor, teams, materials, etc.

Fuel Line Trouble.

It is a fact that a deep dent in the gasoline pipe line may so restrict the flow of fuel that the action of the carburetor will be impaired, misfiring and exhibiting general erratic behavior. In some cases a too abrupt upward bend in the fuel line will permit the formation of air pockets, interfering with the flow of fuel. Trouble in both these cases will be likely to develop at high speeds. If a trap in the fuel line is allowed to fill up with foreign matter trouble will follow through restriction of the gasoline flow. Twice a season anyway, the whole fuel feed system ought to be gone over and cleaned and dents should be smoothed out.

Builders Prepare for Huge Output of Post-War Cars

DETROIT, Mich., July 27.—[Special.]—Detroit and Michigan automobile industries are still awaiting word from their local representatives, now in Washington, as to what the exact curtailment of their steel supply will eventually be, and, to use the words of the head of one of the largest motor industries, "whether we will be allowed to live."

The war industries board's estimate that 20,000,000 tons of steel will be required for war work during the second half of the present year has been sharply challenged by the automobile manufacturers, who find themselves scantily supplied at present. Whether or not the country's industries, in all their various branches, will be able to consume this enormous amount is still regarded as an open question.

However that may be, big Michigan producers are firm in their belief that they will turn back to a peace basis as advantageously as they turned to war. Even now many of the mammoth plants are either contemplating enlarging their facilities or are already doing so.

Packard, Maxwell, and Ford are said to have arranged for added factories, while the Fisher Body company, Studebaker, Motor company, and Timken Axle company (the automobile barometer) are contemplating large extensions. These are practically all in answer to a government call to "do more," but the heads of these industries see their opportunity to answer such a call, and with the coming of peace will find themselves prepared to supply every country on earth with their motor cars.

From those in a position to know comes the statement that every great automobile plant now doing 100 per cent capacity work (75 to 80 per cent of it on government war orders) will immediately turn their plants back to the manufacture of automobiles and motor trucks, and the greatest boom known to the industry will be experienced.

The output of passenger cars at the present time can be placed approximately at 30 per cent of normal. This includes all factories, and not one of them is without its long list of unfilled orders.

$1 a Mile Per Hour.

Speeders had better "go easy" in Louisville, Ky., hereafter. The slower they go the less they will be fined. Judge A. Thurston Burgevin in the police court has announced a new basis for fining such violators of the law.

The rate hereafter will be $1 a mile an hour. That is, the rate of speed per hour will be the rate of the fine.

The new rate went into effect with the presentation of a Negro who was speeding one Saturday afternoon, with the street crowded with racetrack bound vehicles, at thirty-eight miles an hour, according to the testimony of a motorcycle patrolman who pursued him for several blocks. The Negro was in a nice looking touring car. He gave his occupation as a laborer. "Whose car is that?" he was asked. "Mine," he replied. "What do you use it for?" O, jus' foh mah own pussonal use." He was fined $38.

Moved 'Em Himself.

The inability of A. G. Hight of Freeport, Ill., to induce the railroads between Toledo and Freeport to ship his household goods resulted recently in his use of two motor trucks. He drove out of Freeport on a Saturday, made the run to Toledo, loaded his furniture and other articles, and was back by Tuesday evening following, requiring but four days to make the round trip of 600 miles.

"Carless Day" Urged.

In line with an appeal made by the American Defense society, the Automobile Club of Philadelphia has urged its members to forego the use of their cars one or more Sundays in the month as a measure of economy and to invest the money saved in thrift stamps.

Voice of the Motorist

IT MIGHT WORK.

Chicago, July 24.—[Automobile Editor of The Tribune.]—Inasmuch as there are so many automobile accidents, why not establish rules of the road the same as at sea? This would simplify matters very much when it comes to settling damages, for each fellow says, "It's the other fellow's fault."

At sea, there is a law governing every possible position of a vessel and in the event of a collision it's a question of violation of a specific rule, settled by evidence or competent witness, and there is no further argument. The fellow in the wrong pays the damage.

If there were a law clearly defining these conditions we would have few accidents. One rule would be: "When two cars approach at an intersection the one that has the other on its right side must give way."

And so on. In other words, go through the "Rules of the Road at Sea" and apply them to automobiles.

DOESN'T NEED TO BE TOLD.

Chicago, July 26.—[Automobile Editor of The Tribune.]—One thing that I would like to call the attention of the motoring public to is the fact that with the modern starting and lighting systems a battery can be damaged as much by overcharging as by overworking. If the motorist, while on a long, straight run, would burn his headlights, he would actually be conserving the power of his batteries, instead of breaking them down by overcharging.

One reason for writing this is to inform a large number of people with kindly intentions (who inform me that my lights are on) that I know I am running my headlights in the daytime and that I have a reason for so doing.

F. H. A.

Quite so. An article in "The Tribune" not long ago pointed out at some length the desirability of keeping one's lights going occasionally on long runs, even in the daytime.

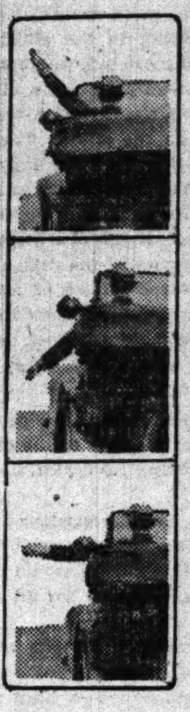
Items of News

A preliminary list issued by the management last week indicates that arrangements have been made thus far for 112 exhibits at the automotive exposition to be held on the Municipal pier Sept. 14 to 21. Six makers of trucks and truck attachments and two tractor manufacturers are on the roster, the rest of the displays being devoted to accessories and incidentals. Harry Newmann is listed as an exhibitor, but does not specify what he'll exhibit.

Overland prices are up again. The increases range from $45 on the light four to $400 on the larger inclosed models.

South Bend Takes 'Tribune' Hint for Driving Signals

SOUTH BEND, Ind., is the first American city, so far as any one knows hereabouts, to give official recognition to a system of arm signals for drivers of motor cars. The pictures herewith were published in THE TRIBUNE on June 2, with the suggestion that the simple plan they illustrate is well worth trying. Evidently they were of the same opinion in South Bend, for Chief of Police Peter Kline has reproduced THE TRIBUNE'S cut in a special bulletin addressed to vehicle drivers, with these instructions:



"Drivers of vehicles are respectfully requested to use the arm signals shown in the illustration herewith when passing through the streets of South Bend.

"The upper picture shows the left arm extended beyond the vehicle and upward, indicating that the driver proposes to make a right hand turn. The center picture shows the arm extended downward, indicating a left hand turn. The lower picture shows the arm extended at a right angle with the side of the vehicle and means that the driver intends either to lessen his speed or to stop.

The signals were suggested originally by the Overland distributor in San Francisco. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has been asked to recommend them for universal adoption in the United States.

P. S.—You'll be interested to note, perhaps, that the man in the pictures is "High Speed," going north.

They Run on Peat.

A Norway firm is advertising engines that can be operated with peat gas instead of benzine or gasoline. The alterations have been made in accordance with a Danish invention, which makes it possible to use this fuel. It is claimed several thousand engines are being used in Denmark successfully. The new system is stated to consume from one to two kilos of peat, 2.2 to 4.4 pounds per horse power, according to the quality of the peat.

A Bit of Light on the Mysteries of Hotchkiss Drive

BY HIGH SPEED.

PROBABLY there are few mechanical features of the modern automobile of which the average car owner knows so little as the so-called Hotchkiss drive.

Most drivers not skilled in the intricacies of their vehicles' mechanism are likely to assume that Hotchkiss drive is some new sort of a bevel or the latest innovation in axles. These guileless souls may be glad to learn a little something more definite in regard to this really important innovation in modern design.

To begin with they should know that Hotchkiss drive is not a definite part of the mechanism. Rather it is a method of eliminating certain parts of the running gear that had always been considered essentials.

By making the springs do double work, strengthening them for that purpose, it is possible to eliminate a number of minor parts, thereby simplifying the design, an end that is greatly to be desired and is being striven for by the best engineering talent in the world today.

◆

Hotchkiss drive is not strictly speaking a new development, for way back in 1902, which is an ancient date in motoring, this method of design was embodied in the Hotchkiss car, the product of an American engineer, but manufactured in France and brought to this country as an alien.

By one of the anomalies that are almost habitual in the business world, it took twelve years for the Hotchkiss drive to achieve popularity in this country. Perhaps this was due to the fact that it was an idea, rather than a part or a device, which would be pushed by some manufacturing company.

The advantages of utilizing the springs in this way simply had to come home to the American engineering fraternity in fate's own good time. No pressure was brought to bear to introduce the idea, which finally in 1913 won its place as the predominating method of design for this part of the mechanism, purely and simply through its inherent merit. At the present time nearly three-fifths of the cars on the American market embody Hotchkiss drive.

◆

Stripped of complications, Hotchkiss drive means simply that the propulsive power is transmitted through the springs instead of through radius rods, etc., as used to be the custom, and also that the rear springs are called upon to take the torque or twist of the whole real axle assembly.

The rear axle unit is peculiarly liable to twisting tendencies, because of its position in the mechanism and functions. When the car is being driven straight ahead there is a certain twisting movement on the part of the rear axle whenever the rate of speed is altered.

This is somewhat different from the movement present when the brakes are applied. In this case the wheels are suddenly stopped, whereas the rest of the car tends to proceed in the direction in which it has been going, in accordance with the laws of inertia.

When the car is being started the axle develops a tendency to turn forward. In some cases where the springs are unusually flexible, the rear axles can actually be seen to turn forward when the car is being started.

◆

Now, as we noted before, in cars embodying Hotchkiss drive, all this twist or torque of the rear axle assembly is taken care of by the springs. In other words, the springs are called upon to absorb this tendency to revolve.

Further, after the car is in motion, the rear axle and wheels must keep the rest of the vehicle moving by pushing it. It is evident on a moment's thought that this is so, because the driving wheels, the rear wheels, give the impetus to the whole vehicle. In Hotchkiss drive this pushing function is also shouldered by the springs.

Obviously, with the springs being called upon to perform so many and such diverse functions, they will need to be especially designed for the work. The usual practice is to employ a main leaf of particularly sturdy dimensions and material, as nearly all of the work falls upon this keystone of the spring arch.

Again, it is very important that a satisfactory method of anchoring the spring to the axle be employed. Our engineers have spent many thoughtful hours in the design of the seemingly minor spring perches and spring clips. These parts demand the employment of the best grades of alloy steel, carefully handled in the processes of manufacture.

◆

Castellated nuts are generally used on the clips, the nuts being firmly secured by means of cotter pins. As a general thing two clips are found sufficient to distribute the torque or twist to the spring as a whole, relieving the central leaf of some of the burden.

Right here let me emphasize the need of the car owner's inspecting the springs from time to time and seeing that the clips are kept snugly in place. If the clips are allowed to become loose, relaxing the pressure on the spring, the driving force may very easily produce so much of a strain that the part will be broken.

When the car owner understands just how important a part the springs play he may be tempted to give them more care than he usually seems to bestow upon them. Not only should the shackle bolts be systematically lubricated, but the spring leaves should be pried apart once or twice a season anyway, and be given a thorough coating of graphite.

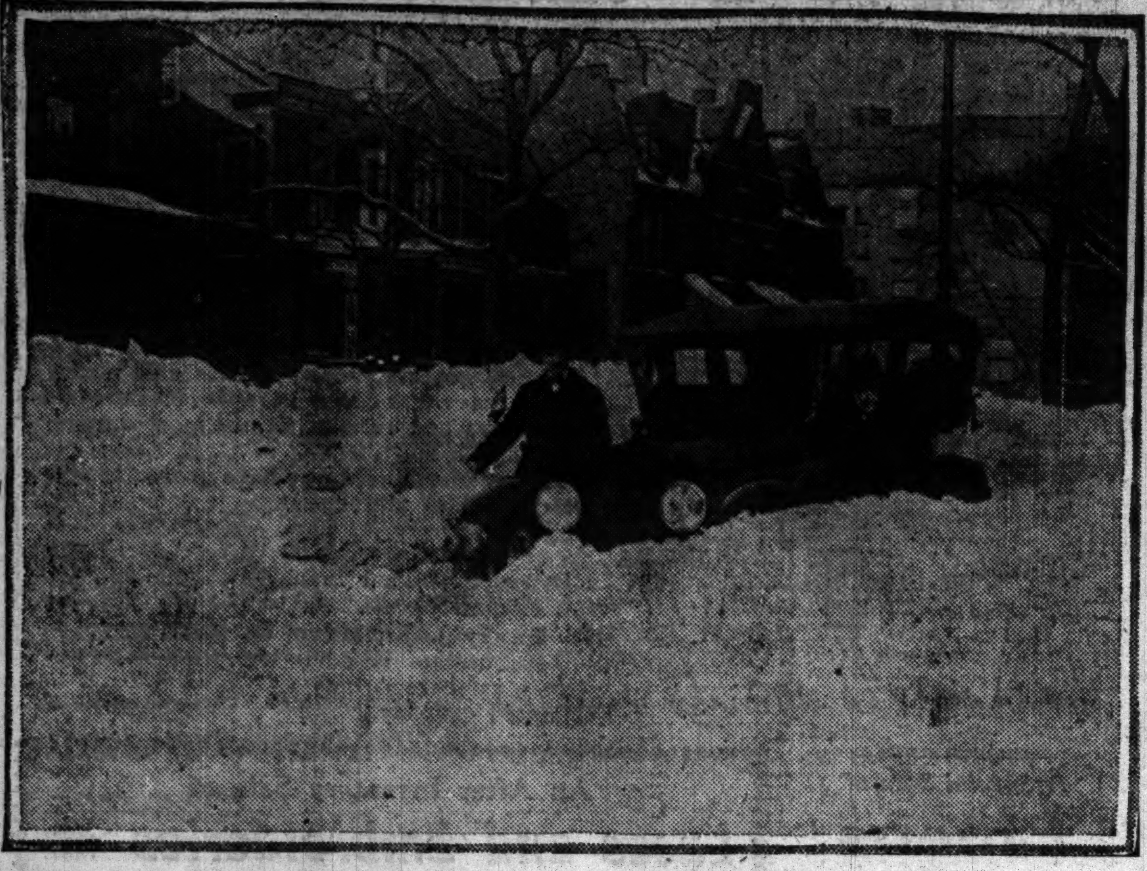
The average spring suspension is adequate to the car it carries, but it is not adequate to abuse. It must have a reasonable amount of attention or it will fail, with consequent inconvenience and expense to the car owner.

Great Stuff, Nature.

According to the new Automobile Blue Books, the scenery twelve miles north of Salem, Ind., on the Jackson highway, is particularly beautiful. For two miles the road gradually ascends, winding as it goes, making forty-two turns in that distance. It must be lovely on a dark night when the driver is alone and his lighting system is ill.

REMEMBER THIS?

You Wouldn't Think It Ever Happened, but It Did.



IF it's hot today you may find it refreshing to recall what happened to a Jordan which they tried to get through our blizzard blocked streets last January for the benefit of visitors at the automobile show. Listen:

"Chicago has been kept busy this month digging itself out. The streets have been like narrow canyons, with the snow banked high on either side, and in many cases the daring motorist has had to dig a path for his car through a snowdrift. A snow shovel was a regular part of the equipment of this car every time it left the garage."

That's what came with the picture. Of course it probably will be cool this morning. The weather man usually throws an editor down when there's a little stunt to be pulled. But as these lines are written ye ed. would give considerable for a sizable chunk of that much abused snow.

The Experts Say - - -

CAR owners who enjoy camping may very easily arrange their vehicles so that they can be turned into a sleeping apartment. By having the back of the front seat hinged so that it will fold even with the bottom of the seats, it is a simple matter to make a comfortable bed and use the car as a sort of individual Pullman.

◆

A very good compound for cleaning the radiator is made as follows: Dissolve as much concentrated lye as a quart of water will hold. Drain a little water out of the radiator and pour in the lye solution. Run the engine for fifteen minutes. Drain the lye solution out and flush the water system out half a dozen times, or until all traces of the lye are removed.

◆

The wheels of the car should be jacked up once a month and tested for smoothness of operation and for side play. If a sharp click is heard when spinning the front wheel or if its motion is momentarily checked, it is possible that one of the balls or rollers is broken or split. In this case the pieces should be removed at once and a new bearing substituted. In the case of ball bearings regrinding may be resorted to.

◆

Ford owners should be very careful, in removing the cylinder head, not to dent or otherwise injure the large gasket. After this gasket has been removed, both sides should be carefully cleaned and then painted with a solution of gum shellac dissolved in alcohol just before it is returned to its place. In replacing the cylinder head the bolts should be firmly tightened and the engine should be run until the metal is thoroughly warmed up and then the bolts can be given another tightening all around.

◆

Noise in the driving bevels of the rear axle is commonly caused by poor adjustment, allowing too little or too much backlash. Bevel gears in use today have a method of adjusting the depth of the mesh obtained either by moving the whole differential unit sideways or by movement of the driving pinion.

◆

While the usual mediums for preventing rusting of the rims are shellac and graphite, it is possible to use beeswax in this connection with very satisfactory results. The rims should be heated slightly with a blow torch and the beeswax should be rubbed on while they are still warm.

Motorists Urged to Help U. S. Nab 'Slacker Tramps'

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27.—The war department points out that automobilists, especially those making long trips that take them away from their accustomed neighborhoods, can perform a patriotic service by assisting in the apprehension of slackers and draft evaders.

An official of the department, discussing this opportunity afforded to motorists to do something for their country, said:

"Tourists throughout America during the season of 1918 will do much good for their country if they will appoint themselves investigators and learn the identity of that class of tourists known in the past few years as automobile tramps.

"For some years now it has been the custom of men traveling through the country, mostly young, but sometimes older men, to beg rides of accommodating motorists with seats to spare. The brake rod, blind baggage, and side door pullman have given way to more enjoyable methods of travel, and motorists have carried the men ordinarily given to bumming their way by railroads many an enjoyable ride.

"But times have changed and there are slackers to be watched for. Young men have kept away from the draft and from rightful service to their country by changing their residence frequently.

"They have sought a haven on farms and the tiller of the soil, hard beset for help, has not been overparticular securing a few days of labor from the wayfarer without asking for his registration card, or perhaps insisting on knowing more about his new helper. Motorists can be of great assistance in bringing these slackers to book."

Questions and Answers

By High Speed

Because of the large volume of requests for touring information and the relatively small amount of space available for answering them, readers who wish measurably prompt replies are advised to inclose a stamped and self-addressed envelope with their inquiries, so that they may be answered by mail. Questions of general interest, such as those pertaining to driving and the care of the car, will be answered as far as possible in this column.

Can you tell me if it is safe to run with a steering knuckle that is loose up and down? I put in a couple of split washers, but they fall out.

AMATEUR, Clinton, Ia.

By all means have the matter attended to at once. Running with a worn knuckle often causes breakage and a serious accident may follow. A new knuckle will not cost you much.

◆

My car has always run hot; on the slightest excuse it boils over. Would there be any use in fitting a racing type radiator? J. McG., Chicago.

This type of radiator is more efficient than the ordinary sort, because the air draft reaches the entire width of the device, thus helping to cool all hte water, as it comes down. In the wider radiators parts at the end are not thoroughly cooled. Whether you would be justified in spending the money in making the necessary changes you must judge.

◆

Kindly advise me as to the best route to Denver.

T. J. SCONE,
Rockford, Ill.

Follow the Lincoln highway through Clinton, Cedar Rapids, Marshalltown, Denison, Omaha, Grand Island, and North Platte to Big Spring, Neb. Then leave the highway and go through Julesburg and Fort Morgan to Denver.

◆

A bets that the Benz holds the mile record. B holds that a Packard car recently broke the former's figures. Which wins?

As you word it A wins. The Benz still holds the American straightaway record of 25.40 seconds. The Packard, piloted by William Rader, last year broke all American speedway records from one to ten miles, but the Benz's straightaway mark still holds.

◆

Is there any American car of the present day employing a wooden frame instead of steel? I had a car some ten years ago with a wooden frame and as I look back it seems to me that this construction was almost ideal. Why did American manufacturers generally take up metal in preference to wood for frame construction?—K. J., Chicago.

The only American passenger car using a wooden frame is the Franklin. The advantages claimed for the wooden frame are superior strength for equal weight and absorption of vibration. No doubt the relative cheapness of metal frames and ease of manufacture had most to do with influencing the decision of the manufacturers.

◆

What is the best route between Hammond, Ind., and Zanesville, O.?

H. E. FELK, Hammond.

Go through Highland, Hobart, Wheeler, Valparaiso, Kouts, Tefft, San Pierre, North Judson, Bass Lake, Culver, De Long, Rochester, Akron, North Manchester, and Fort Wayne. At this point take the Lincoln highway through Van Wert, Lima, and Marion. Then leave the L. H. and drive south of Columbus and east through Jacksontown to Zanesville.

◆

Is there any real value in a cutout? Some people claim that with a cutout your engine does not heat as badly nor carbonize as much and consequently has more power. Others say that there is no value in the cutout. Please give me your advice on the subject.

M. M. B., Evanston.

The cutout has some value in reducing exhaust gas back pressure and consequently there is a utilization of a little more power. The amount gained for propulsive use is usually less than 1 per cent of the whole, simply because of the efficiency of present day mufflers. The cutout simply allows the exhaust gas to pass into the atmosphere, avoiding the muffler altogether.

◆

In making a shift from high to second, cannot this be done without the gears hitting? I have been driving for some time and haven't learned how yet. What is the trick?—J. L. D.

Speed up the engine just a little before you shift into second. That is, move the lever and press the accelerator a little at the same time.

◆

A grinding noise has developed in the transmission of my car. I have drained out the lubricant, flushed the case with kerosene, and put in fresh oil, but the noise persists. Can you suggest anything?—L. F., What Cheer, Ia.

A persistent grinding noise of this kind may be caused by misalignment of the gears or by metallic particles, bits of teeth, etc., that have worked in between the gears. Unless you can do the work yourself, you had better have the service station check up the alignment of the shafts and make what repairs are necessary.

◆

Please publish the best route from Highland Park to Lake Zurich.

E. P. JOHNSON, Chicago.

◆

There's something or other the matter with the clutch of my car. No matter how carefully I let in the clutch, the car jumps like a jack rabbit. What can I do with it?—P. O., Kalamazoo, Mich.

You do not mention the make of car, but if the clutch is of the cone type, there is a lack of resiliency in the facing. Try a treatment with neat's foot oil, spread on evenly with a brush. If the clutch is of the disk type, lack of oil is probably the cause of your trouble.

Why the Scotch Highlanders Wear Kilts

BECAUSE the Highland Scot, wading through the wet heather of the mountains, found Kilts kept drier.

In the beginning the Kilt was the garment of the tropics, the trouser of the arctics, for men and women alike.

Even before the Roman soldier, himself a Kiltie, occupied the British Isles, Lowland and Highland folk wore Kilts.

When modern life turned the Lowlands to trousers, the wet mountain heather caused the Highlands to cling to Kilts.

But his wet heather, had GOODRICH been founded, wouldn't have worried the Highlander.

GOODRICH SERVICE VALUE TIRES

Goodrich would have met his needs with Hipress boots and waterproof garments, just as Goodrich met the critical need of the automobile for the right rubber tire.

Twenty-two years, Goodrich has shaped the destiny of automobile tires, bringing them from crude, clumsy affairs, to the graceful, masterful GOODRICH SERVICE VALUE TIRES.

And all Goodrich inventions and improvements were directed toward one end, SERVICE VALUE to the user.

For Goodrich recognizes but one tire value; what a tire is worth to the motorist on his car and on the road, in comfort, economy, freedom from trouble, and long mileage.

Goodrich manufacture puts SERVICE VALUE in Goodrich Tires, both SILVERTOWN CORDS, and BLACK SAFETY TREADS, Goodrich Test Car Fleets prove it is there by millions of miles of road testing.

By and About the Folks Who Make 'Em and Sell 'Em

LATEST reports from Ray McNamara and Parke West, who are piloting a loaded Maxwell truck on an experimental run from San Francisco to New York, place them at North Platte, Neb., a week ahead of the schedule, laid out by McNamara before he started. They covered the 1,650 miles across California, Nevada, Utah, and Wyoming in ten days. This means an average, over the desert and mountains, of better than 150 miles a day—a hitherto unheard of performance for a loaded truck.

The drivers are following the Lincoln highway, and have found the roughest roads to be in central Wyoming. They have rescued two cars from the desert, encountered cold, rain, hail, snow, and mud, and crossed the main range of the Rockies in a snowstorm at an elevation of 8,300 feet.

Distribution of Peerless passenger cars and trucks in the Chicago territory was transferred last week from the Hughey Motor Car company to the Magnetic Motors corporation, local agents for the Owen Magnetic, Deering Magnetic, and Rauch & Lang electric. The former Woods building, at Twenty-fifth street and Calumet avenue, has been leased as a service station for all four makes of cars, and the Magnetic Motors corporation assumes, in addition, the task of supplying parts for all Woods electrics throughout the United States. This is the second "orphan car" the concern has to care for, since it already acts as ward for the Stevens-Duryea.

Car owners and chauffeurs—owners more particularly—are urged by the Chicago Automobile Trade association to educate themselves as thoroughly as possible in the care and repair of their machine, the war having taken heavy toll of the ranks of mechanics and cut the possibilities of dealer service to a minimum. A bulletin to this effect has been issued by the organization, which has officially indorsed the Greer College of Automobile, Tractor, and Aeroplane Engineering as a good place to learn.

Rebanding of old automobile tires by a process much used in France and England has been introduced in Chicago by the recently organized McEwen Vulgumon Process company, which announces the opening of a plant at 1935 Indiana avenue. A novel feature of the process is that it vulcanizes new treads on old carcasses without the use of steam. Standard makes of semi-cured bands are obtained from the various tire manufacturers, so that the retreaded tires have the appearance of new ones with, it is claimed, substantially the same wearing qualities.

A new truck, the All-American, has been launched by a Chicago concern headed by R. H. Spear. The unique policy of the organization provides that none but American citizens shall be employed in its factory and sales organization, and that for the period of the war its trucks shall be sold only for service directly connected with the general war program.

The builders of the Hupmobile are the latest passenger car concern to announce the production of a light truck. It's to be known as a "business wagon" and will be ready in about a month.

A rigorous test of truck efficiency on long hauls is being made by the United States Tire company, which is operating a fleet between the Detroit and Indianapolis plants, 310 miles apart. The concern finds that the use of large pneumatic tires greatly increases the possibilities of speed and involves a fuel saving of not less than 33 1-3 per cent.

The Ehman Tire and Rubber company has added to its present plant a new factory building at Twenty-seventh and La Salle streets.

A long series of experiments leads the makers of Essenkay tire filler to claim for their product that it increases normal tire mileage from 100 to 300 per cent. Several of the tests indicating that the filler is not affected by heat, cold, or pressure were conducted by Prof. C. F. Gebhardt of the Armour institute.

MINUTE MEN READY TO DRIVE FOR UNCLE SAM

MOTOR MINUTE MEN OF AMERICA
348

INFINITE are the ways in which motorists have been showing their loyalty. They have bought Liberty bonds and war stamps and have donated their cars for this purpose and that. Now come the Motor Minute Men of America, a new national organization which is growing rapidly.

The enterprise was launched by Chicagoans who were instrumental in organizing the motor transport train of the Third regiment, Illinois Reserve militia. These men found that a great many car owners were anxious to do their bit in the way of placing their machines at the disposal of the authorities in case of emergency, but were not in a position to give the necessary time to join the militia organization.

The purpose set forth in the charter as granted by the state is to perfect and maintain a national organization of motor vehicle owners who shall hold themselves in readiness to render transportation service for troops, officers, secret service men, messages, or supplies when called upon to do so.

Each member of the organization pledges himself to respond to any call that is made upon him for the service of his car, providing such call is made through the proper channels. Each member, unless he is a member of the American Protective league, is required to report to his captain or lieutenant any seditious acts or conversation.

Incidentally, the Motor Minute Men of America claim the honor of being the first organization to adopt officially the practice of giving sailors and soldiers a lift. The rule requiring this courtesy was published in a folder issued several months ago.

Nelson N. Lampert is treasurer of the organization and D. E. Northam secretary. Members' cars are to be identified by the radiator emblem pictured above.

1,000 Dealers in Conference Here on Wartime Plans

NEARLY 1,000 automobile distributors and dealers from various parts of Illinois and Indiana are expected at the Hotel La Salle on Tuesday at the conference called by the Chicago Automobile Trade association to discuss the special problems which recent months have developed for the motor car men.

The meeting will be strictly a wartime affair, the visitors paying their own expenses and indulging in no banquets or similar festivities. Sessions will begin at 10:30 a. m. and representatives of the local organization will be at the hotel to meet the dealers as they arrive.

Men prominent in the industry who have been spending much of their time in Washington of late will give the conferees such information as they have regarding legislation proposed at the capital and will outline the conservation plan recently agreed upon by the government and a war service committee of the National Automobile Dealers' association.

"There are hundreds of dealers throughout this territory who do not know what the future of their business will be," says an announcement from the local trade association. "Recent rumors and developments in Washington have caused considerable anxiety, and the purpose of this meeting is to get at the facts. For obvious reasons these cannot be published, and no one not identified with the automobile business will be permitted to pass into the convention hall."

Community Garages.

Hotel men representing several of the largest hostelries in New York are interested in the erection of a mammoth garage to care for the cars of hotel guests. A company has been incorporated under the style Inter-State Garage, Inc., and it is planned eventually to have a garage in all the principal cities in the country. The New York garage will occupy and provide an individual locked space for each car, the total capacity to be 863 cars.

To obviate dust and dirt getting into the sedan or similar closed car during warm weather, it is a good plan to fit a screen of fine mesh wire commonly used in Pullmans, over the lower half of the window.

REAL ESTATE—FARM LANDS.

Canada.

WHEAT!

This is the most favorable time to buy wheat land in the Northwest, and the Davidson District is the most favorable place. The high price for wheat, oats, and barley is having its effect on land values, and when we market our 1918 crop, which promises to be a bumper, land prices are going to jump.

Our proposition is ideal for actual settlers, but nonresidents can own a farm under our plan and we will look after your farming interests. People of moderate means can get a start toward independence. You know that the farmer is getting high prices for everything, and you can increase your income materially by farming yourself.

Don't kick about high prices for food. Get busy and produce some yourself. A card will bring, by mail, full information with a book of fine views of farming in Western Canada.

SUCCESS

In your final analysis of a land proposition be careful to get correct data as to the cost per acre, fertility, location, climate, and markets. All these conditions combined make for your success. If any one is lacking a farmer is handicapped that much at the start.

TODAY the farm renter and wage earner have an unparalleled opportunity to get 10, 20, 40, 60, 80 or more acres of hardwood land in an ideal farming district for only $15 to $30 per acre on very easy terms. This district is in Kalkaska and Antrim counties, Michigan, where we own and control many thousands of acres.

ALTHOUGH THE PRICE of the land is so low, the crop earnings compare very favorably with those of Illinois or Indiana, where the price per acre is sometimes as high as $300. The location cannot be better, being in Michigan's great fruit belt, from where many large cities are quickly reached. There is abundance of rainfall and a fine mild climate due to the influence of Lake Michigan. Michigan is probably the greatest health resort state of them all.

THE ABOVE CONDITIONS assure you success, and when combined with our special features "make assurance doubly sure." We offer you free insurance; loan money to make improvements; no taxes for five years to settlers; credit railroad fare on purchase; free farm advisers and many other helps, such as no other organization offers to its customers. Ask for our big booklet mailed free on request.

WRITE TODAY for special excursion dates and rates. Best time of year to see the growing crops. Offices open week days, Monday evenings, and Saturday afternoons.

REAL ESTATE—FARM LANDS.

Wisconsin.

After the War

What? Some think there will be many immigrants coming over. We don't. Europe will need its able bodied men for rebuilding. What effect will our boys' coming home have upon land values? A wise, practical plan must be pursued, to avoid land speculation and to give every returned soldier who wants to turn farmer A CHANCE TO OWN HIS OWN FARM.

A scheme of long time credits, for farms, horses, machinery, etc., must be inaugurated. Secretary of the Interior Lane is already working on the problem.

IMPROVED FARMS in good soil, abundant rainfall sections, will continue in good demand. Food production must be maintained and increased. The rise in farm values, in our judgment, will continue, not sensationally, but steadily and substantially.

WE ARE OWNERS OF REAL FARMS, with buildings, clearings, wells, fences, etc., in good soil districts in Wisconsin. Prices $1,000 up. Very liberal terms. Ten years to pay. WE SOMETIMES TAKE IN DESIRABLE PROPERTY IN PART PAYMENT. We sell horses, cows, wagons, etc., on liberal terms.

In business in Wisconsin for more than forty years. We have our own building in MEDFORD, and ample facilities for taking care of customers. Write us TODAY for FREE literature and booklet, "Letters from Satisfied Customers." R. R. fare refunded to buyers. FARMS IN TAYLOR, MARATHON, PRICE, LINCOLN, LANGLADE, AND OTHER COUNTIES.

COUNTRY STORE MANAGER.

Investment Opportunity.

The advertiser has built up a large and exceptionally profitable grocery, provision, flour, and feed business in a town 14 miles from Indianapolis on interurban railway.

I operated the business for more than 10 years at substantial profit and incorporated it last year. The business is growing all the time. Have two auto trucks for delivery and a number of runabouts which are used by salesmen. More than 100 farmers are stockholders.

Having other business which requires my attention, I offer my home, consisting of 9 rooms and pantry, deep well, natural gas, pasture lot, and 440 shares of stock which carries the management of this enterprise for $8,000 total. Dividends at the rate of 12% per annum are being earned and paid, and with the advent of a manager who can devote all of his time to the business it can be made much more profitable.

This is the opportunity for a man familiar with merchandise to step into a good position, paying a good salary, with a fine country home; also affords employment for one or two sons or daughters at a good salary. First class churches and schools and the benefit of residence in the country with easy access to the metropolis of this state. Full opportunity for investigation of books. Bank references. Will assist my successor in becoming thoroughly familiar with the business until such time as he can carry it on alone. Will deal with principals only. Last 12 Months of War Bring Vast New Aid to Help Allies Drive Back German Armies

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Events big with the fate of nations have marked the fourth year of the war, which now comes to a close. It has been a twelve months of alternate hope and concern for the powers of the entente alliance.

It was on July 28, 1914, that Austria declared war on Serbia, beginning the great struggle. During the last twelve months there have been occurrences that in some aspects have been of even greater import in their influence upon the world than those in the preceding period. Russia's collapse, the Italian defeat last autumn, the stupendous drives of the Germans against the allied armies, and the wonderful defensive operations that have again and again checked the enemy when success for him seemed near at hand have held the world breathless. But, transcending in significance any event in the actual theaters of the war, America's full participation in the conflict, involving the transportation overseas of more than a million men to engage in it, must remain for all time the great outstanding feature of the fourth year of the struggle. It is upon America that the entente is relying for the men and resources to turn the tide.

Movement Only Lately.

A year ago the number of American troops going to Europe had not begun to assume large proportions. A few regulars and some national guardsmen had been sent to France, but most of the big military training camps were still being built and the men selected as the first contingent to be called to the colors were still in citizens' clothes. Until the first day of August of 1917 the total number of American soldiers taken overseas was 26,967.

Soon after that date the movement of troops was accellerated. Thousands were dispatched across the Atlantic during the winter months, but it was not until the great German offensive was started late in March of 1918 that the movement began to assume really noteworthy proportions. The figures for the months from Aug. 1, 1917, to July 1, 1918, follow:

August, 18,323; September, 32,523; October, 38,259; November, 23,016; December, 48,840; January, 46,776; February, 48,027; March, 83,811; April, 117,212; May, 244,345; June, 276,382.

On July 1, 1918, there were 14,644 American marines in France, bringing the total number of American troops in that country and Italy up to 1,019,115.

Compares Well to Others.

During the recent fighting in France the work of the American soldiers has compared favorably with that of other fighting men in the world. They have held sectors here and there along the front. They are in Alsace and northward, in the Lorraine sector. The famous St. Mihiel sector is held by Americans, who are posted also on the line along the heights of the Meuse. East of Reims they took part in the fighting during the last phase of the German offensive, while in the Chateau Thierry sector they held their line in a vital region against the utmost fury of the Teutonic onslaught. North of Chateau Thierry Americans helped to stop the drive of the Germans in the early days of June, and in the Somme sector, at Cantigny and Grivesnes, they have given proof of their soldierly qualities.

The allies have been called upon to face two great offensives during the last year. The first of these came last October, in Italy, and the second, in France, began on March 21. The German drives in France, while separated by periods of from a few days to several weeks, have been considered as different phases of the same offensive. The abortive Austrian attack against Italy in June also is looked upon as merely another attack against the western front, and not as a distinct military operation.

Russia Made Them Possible.

But these offensives, perhaps, never would have been begun had it not been for the collapse of Russia during the last winter. German and Austrian troops released from the Russian front were taken to France and Italy to swell the masses of men hurled against the allies in the western theater of operations. As long as Russia remained in the fight it held great numbers of Teutonic troops in the east, and its withdrawal from the war exercised a fundamental influence on the course of its development.

Situation a Year Ago.

The year opened with the fortunes of war apparently favoring the entente. The British had forced back the Germans to the famous Hindenburg line. The French had established themselves firmly along the Chemin des Dames, north of the Aisne. The echoes of Verdun were still ringing the knell of German hopes in that sector of the battle area. The Italians were holding their lines along the Isonzo. The rejuvenated Russian "regiment of July 1st" had carried the war far into the Austrian defenses in Bukowina and Galicia.

Through August and September, 1917, there came rumors that Russia was exhausted by the war, and quiet settled down along the lines from the gates of the Carpathians to the Baltic. Stories were heard of fraternization of German and Russian troops, but assurances came from Petrograd that Russia would stand true to its allies.

Fall Offensive in Italy.

The German and Austrian high commands had no illusions as to further Russian belligerency. There came to the allies reports that the central empires were taking the pick of their forces from the Russian front and concentrating them for a drive against some part of the line in the western theater. Then came intimations that the blow was aimed against Italy.

The storm broke at Caporetto on Oct. 26, and almost immediately the whole Italian line was thrown into disorder. Pouring through the passes, where in some instances disaffected Italian troops held positions, the Germans and Austrians made progress which from the first was alarming. By wise generalship the Italian line was withdrawn from the Isonzo. It paused at the Tagliamento, and then retired further, until it rested on the Piave, almost within sight of the domes of Venice. Here the Italian army reformed its columns, consolidated its positions by withdrawing from the Rhætian mountains to the Asiago plateau, and, assisted by the French reinforcements brought to that battle front, stood at bay.

Russian Collapse.

Events in the meanwhile had been moving swiftly in Russia. On Nov. 1, while the offensive against Italy was under way, Alexander F. Kerensky, then the Russian premier, announced that Russia was worn out by the war, and that the allies must shoulder the burden thenceforward.

Seven days later Kerensky was deposed by the Bolsheviki. The fall and flight of Kerensky was the signal for Germany and Austria to enter into peace negotiations with Russia. On Nov. 30 the Bolsheviki announced that Russia was out of the war, and proposed that all the allies join in negotiations for an armistice.

Russian and German representatives met at Brest-Litovsk on Dec. 22, and terms of peace were exchanged. No progress was made with the negotiations, and the conference was broken up on Jan. 11. In the meantime a new republic had sprung from the side of Russia. It was Ukraine, a territory extending along the Roumanian and Galician frontier, from the Black sea northward to Cholm, in ancient Poland. With this republic the central empires made peace late in January.

The failure of the Bolshevik authorities to reach any agreement with the Germans resulted in the renewal of hostilities on Feb. 18, and the German armies moved forward once more.

Brest-Litovsk Treaty.

This brought about a renewal of the peace negotiations, and at Brest-Litovsk the Bolsheviki were given to understand that Germany would recognize the kingdom of Poland, the republic of Ukraine, the independence of Finland, and the separate governmental status of Lithuania, Esthonia, and Livonia. Turkey, as an ally of the central powers, was given a great area to the east of the Black sea, including the regions of Batum, Kars, and Erivan.

With the announcement of the final signing of the treaty between the Bolsheviki and Germany the allies gave up hope that Russia would remain in the conflict, and at once they began to strengthen their lines against the coming of the great German offensive by which Berlin and Vienna hoped to force the entente nations to make peace.

Roumania Capitulates.

With the greater part of her territory occupied by the Germans, Austrians, and Bulgarians, with her government driven from Bucharest to Jassy, and with the Russian Bolsheviki openly hostile toward her, Roumania found herself in a critical situation. Roumanian troops during February and March advanced into Bessarabia, a part of the new republic of Ukraine, but they were hemmed in by the enemy forces and obliged to withdraw. At last, on May 6, Roumania signed a treaty of peace with the central powers.

By this treaty Roumania lost the province of Dobrudja, on the south side of the Danube, which she had received after the Balkan war, and agreed to a rectification of her western frontier. Economic concessions also were made under pressure from the Teutonic alliance.

Peace Tentatives.

The period between Dec. 1, 1917, and March 1, 1918, may be called the period of peace tentatives. It is true that before the end of the summer Pope Benedict made an appeal to the warring nations to enter into peace negotiations, the basis for pourparlors being the restoration of Belgium and Serbia and the return to Germany of her lost colonies. This appeal, made on Aug. 13, was answered by President Wilson on Aug. 29, when the president announced that the German government as constituted could not be believed and that the United States was ready to enter into negotiations when the German people showed they desired peace and when they spoke through any authority which would be representative of them.

The German answer to the pope's appeal reached the vatican on Sept. 21. It expressed hope that further warfare could be averted through the good offices of the pope, but declined to enter into any engagement to meet what the allies had declared to be their minimum war aims.

German Peace Offer.

German efforts to secure a peace which would leave to Germany all the fruits of her victory gained through Russia's collapse, and with Belgium and large portions of France to be used as pawns at the council table, began with the address of Count Czernin, then Austrian foreign minister, at Brest-Litovsk on Dec. 26. The keynote of the address was general peace without annexations and indemnities.

On Jan. 8, President Wilson, addressing congress, said that the United States must know for whom the German rulers were speaking. The address was a complement to an address made on Jan. 5 by David Lloyd George, the British premier.

To these addresses reply was made by Imperial Chancellor von Hertling of Germany and Count Czernin. The latter was pacific and conciliatory in tone, while the former, alluding to "the good German sword," showed he was speaking for the militarists of the Germanic powers.

"Four Principles."

To these replies there was rejoinder by President Wilson, who, on Feb. 11, again addressing congress, laid down what have come to be known as the "four principles" upon which peace can be based.

Last winter it became known that the Germans were massing forces on the western front. Reports came that large units were training behind the lines and that new and more terrible engines of war than had been known before were to be used in the German effort to break the allied front, crush their armies, and force them to make peace. The drive was well advertised and even the place where it was to be launched was known with comparative certainty.

On the morning of March 21 the Germans began their attack from the vicinity of Arras, on the north, to La Fere, on the south, and centering their heaviest columns against the British forces under Gen. Gough at St. Quentin.

Staggering before the impact of the blow, the British army fell back rapidly. For eight days, the Germans poured through the old allied line in an effort to crush the British and drive a wedge between them and the French, who were holding the lines to the south. Then came a period of reaction and the Germans came to a stop. They had driven ahead for thirty-five miles, along a front extending more than fifty miles before they were halted.

Hardly had their legions been held before Amiens than a new offensive was begun in Flanders on April 2. It swept the British back through Armentieres, but did not break their lines. The British, with the French, who were rushed up to the front, stopped the Germans after they had reached the hills southwest of Ypres. There, on April 9, the Germans suffered a terrible defeat that halted their offensive in that quarter.

Foch in Supreme Command.

In the midst of the drive in the sector toward Amiens the allied nations took a vitally important step. They named Gen. Ferdinand Foch, hero of the first battle of the Marne, generalissimo of the allied forces on the western front, which includes all the line in Italy, as well as in France. Even the Murman coast, in northern Russia, has been held to be under his command.

After a period of quiet, the Germans attacked once more, this time on the Aisne river, and in seven days reached the Marne at Chateau Thierry, making a penetration of about twenty-eight miles. At the Marne they were checked and the impetus of the blow was broken.

With hardly a day's pause for reorganization of their forces, the Germans again attacked, choosing the sector between Montdidier and Noyon, on the southern side of the salient driven into the allied line during the March offensive, as the stage of their onslaught. This offensive ran for five days and was stopped north of Compiegne after losses which were described as unprecedented had been inflicted upon the Germans.

Strike at Marne.

From June 14 until July 15 the Germans were engaged in shifting their forces and then they again struck. This time the line of attack was from Chateau Thierry eastward, around to the north of Reims and then down the Vesle river to Prunay, and from that village eastward to Massiges. This attack at the close of the year developed into one of the most ambitious of the German strokes.

German forces crossed the Marne over a wide front, but were unable to make ground against American troops near Chateau Thierry, and could not advance rapidly further east. They did, however forge ahead on the north side of the Marne and between that stream and the mountain of Reims. It appeared for a time that they might reach Epernay.

Then Gen. Foch struck a counter blow, which is still in progress. American and French troops attacked the Germans between Fontenoy, on the Aisne, west of Soissons and Belleau, on the Clignon northwest of Chateau Thierry. So sudden and powerful was the blow that the Germans fell back rapidly until their reserves could be hurried up.

The rapid advance of the allies, however, so menaced the German forces farther south that on July 19 the enemy began a retreat across the Marne. On Sunday, July 21, French and Americans entered Chateau Thierry and pressed on after the retiring Germans.

Since that time the allies have gained slowly, but steadily, not only south of Soissons but also north of the Marne and between that river and Reims. There are indications that a German retreat from the salient is now under way.

Italians Stand Firm.

On June 15, the Austrians began a drive against Italy. It was a failure. The Austrians crossed the Piave, but on the west bank met with such stubborn resistance that progress was impossible. Slowly the Austrians were driven back toward the river, and then the Piave, swollen by rains in the mountains, completed the overthrow of Austria's hopes.

After suffering terrible losses the Austrans retreated to the eastern bank of the Piave from the Montello plateau to the Adriatic.

The year's fighting has entailed great losses for most of the belligerents. During the drive into Italy last October and November the Teutonic armies claimed the capture of more than 180,000 Italians. In the German offensives in France this year about 190,000 French, British, American, and Portuguese troops were reported to have been taken prisoner.

Added to these losses are the casualties in killed and wounded. No definite figures have been issued by Germany and Austria, but it has been reported on what appears to be good authority that in the fighting from March 21 till June 14 the Germans lost more than 500,000 men. The French and British losses were considerably smaller, as the allies were fighting from intrenched positions.

Financial Aspects.

The United States has floated three great Liberty loans. The proceeds of these loans have aggregated $10,783,541,900. The total war cost to the United States, according to latest available figures, is $13,800,000,000. Since the nation entered the war it has extended credits to the allies aggregating $6,091,590,000.

The total cost of the war to England up to Dec. 15, 1917, was placed at £6,242,000,000, while French votes of credit are somewhat smaller. At latest reports the total of the German war loans approximated $31,000,000,000.

Internal Disorders.

There have been numerous reports of disorders in countries engaged in the war. Riots and bloodshed have been reported from Germany and Austria many times during the last spring and summer, and there is little doubt that the Slavic races of Austria are seething with discontent.

Ireland came to the center of the stage in this connection early in May, when a pro-German plot was detected but nipped in the bud, with the arrest of seventy-eight leaders of the Sinn Fein.

Recently disaffection was reported against the British in South Africa, but it has apparently been stamped out.

During the year one ruler of a belligerent country died. The death of the sultan of Turkey was announced in June, subsequent reports intimating he had been murdered.

LARGE VOLUME OF REALTY BUSINESS DEVELOPS

MANUFACTURING PROPERTY CHIEF TRADE FEATURE

Two Transactions Noted in the Central District.

There was much of encouragement in the week's real estate market which developed a large volume of trading of an important character. It probably was a broader market than during the previous week, with special activity in manufacturing property, the central manufacturing district on the south side furnishing two notable transactions, while outlying West Twelfth street also furnished three of much importance.

There was also a large volume of trading in apartment property, though, with the exception of the sale of the Lincoln apartment hotel in Rogers Park, there was nothing of any particular magnitude. There was, however, an unusually large number of transactions in medium priced properties. There also was a notable Lake street building lease, and an interesting sale of south side residence property.

The activity in manufacturing property was undoubtedly the feature of the market, the most important being the purchase in the central manufacturing district by the Amalgamated Machinery corporation, not only because of the large consideration involved, $400,000, but also because of the plans of the corporation for a large addition to the present plant on the property. This addition is made necessary by reason of government contracts for the manufacture of war material, to which cause, it may be said, is due most of the great and growing industrial activity in and around Chicago.

Big Deal Rumored.

In this connection much interest attaches to the persistent reports current to the effect that some large eastern concern is negotiating for the purchase of the entire block bounded by Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, Wood streets and Hermitage avenue, as a site for a big plant. It has been impossible, however, to verify the reports in this connection.

The Amalgamated Machinery corporation purchased from John A. Spoor and Arthur G. Leonard, trustees of the district, the property on Racine avenue on the east side of the Chicago river, about 1,468 feet south of Thirty-fifth street, on which it has a frontage of about 800 feet and an average width of about 1,050 feet, and about 950 feet on Racine avenue. The tract is irregular in shape, with an average length of about 835 feet. It is improved with three one story buildings, each 300 by 66 feet, ground dimensions.

$400,000 Is Paid.

The Amalgamated company paid $400,000 for the property, paying $100,000 in cash and giving a trust deed to Silas H. Strawn, trustee, to secure a purchase money mortgage for $300,000 eighteen months at 6 per cent. The purchasing company has been occupying the property under lease for several years and will make additions to the present plant to cost in the neighborhood of $500,000 and will manufacture gun boring machines and shells.

The other transaction was the purchase by the Northern Jobbing company, a coöperative union of some 600 retail country merchants, who hold conventions in Chicago twice a year, from the trustees of the central manufacturing district of the property at 3600-3660 Loomis place for an expressed consideration of $136,500. The lot has a frontage of about 330 feet, west front, with a depth of 125 feet, and is improved with a five story and basement building erected in the latter part of 1916 and which covers about half the area of the lot and which cost about $100,000. The company has been occupying the property under a lease with an option to purchase, which it has exercised, and in connection with the acquirement of the property gave a trust deed to secure a part purchase money mortgage for $60,000. E. C. Glenny represented the company in a legal way.

The company has had a remarkably rapid growth since its organization a few years ago. The company originally occupied about 3,000 square feet of floor space at 1000 South Canal street and later moved to the Soo Terminal warehouse building at 1230 South Canal street.

Woman Makes Deal.

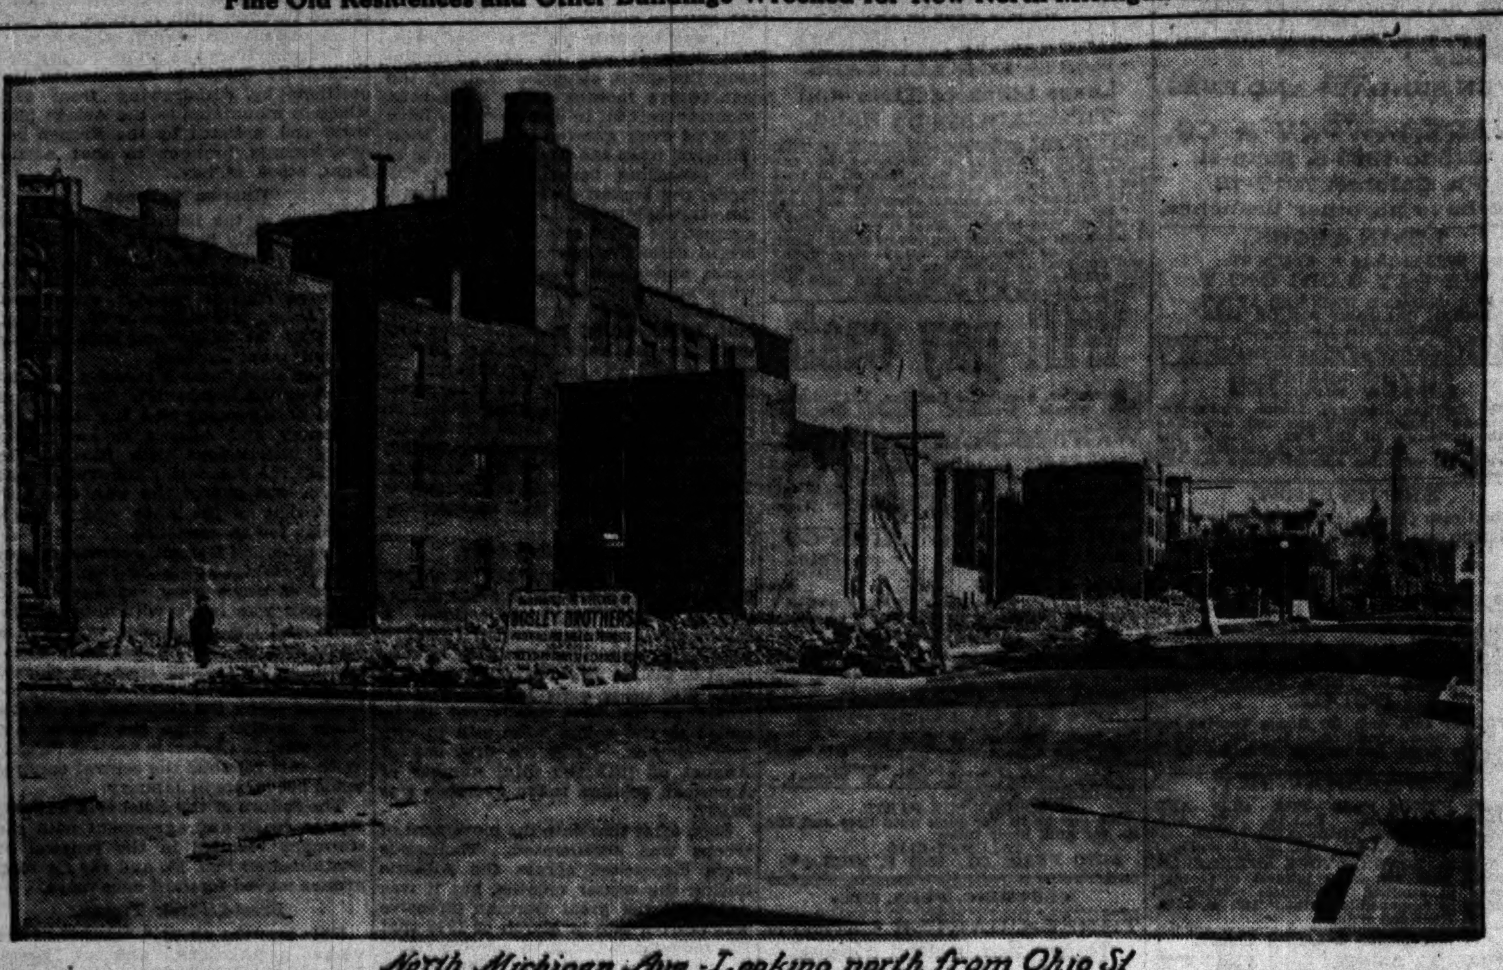
Mrs. Henry H. Walker has sold to the W. D. Allen Manufacturing company, manufacturers of brass and rubber goods, and the R. M. Eddy Foundry company about 100,000 square feet of land each, with switch track connections from the B. & O. Chicago Terminal road, which she will improve with buildings for the occupancy of the purchasing companies. The Eddy Foundry Co. acquired the property at the northeast corner of Menard avenue and Fillmore street, which will be improved with a one story building about 90 by 300 feet ground dimensions. The Allen company acquired the property at the northeast corner of Twelfth street and Waller avenue and will be improved with a one story building about 100 by 300 feet.

The price to be paid by the Eddy company is stated to be about $80,000, while for the Allen company it is stated to be about $300,000, the land in each instance going for about $40,000. Architect B. N. Crowen is preparing plans for the buildings. Both deals were negotiated by Thomas H. Willis of H. H. Walker & Co.

Another west side deal involving the erection of a factory building to cost in the neighborhood of $50,000 was the sale by Mrs. Henry H. Walker to the Manufacturing Equipment company, manufacturers of air clutches, of the property at the northwest corner of Waller avenue and Fillmore street, 316 by 330 feet, for an indicated consideration of $33,000, according to revenue stamps on the deed, no incumbrance showing. The property has switch track connections with the B. & O. C. T. R. The preliminary work of improvement has begun.

NO AIR RAID, BUT THE BOULEVARD LINK

Fine Old Residences and Other Buildings Wrecked for New North Michigan Avenue.



North Michigan Ave - Looking north from Ohio St

The above picture is a view of the west side of North Michigan avenue (formerly Lincoln Park boulevard) looking north from Ohio street, where buildings have been razed in connection with the widening of that street in the boulevard link project. In the distance is the Chicago avenue water tower, which probably will be moved back.

The northwest corner of Ohio street formerly was occupied by the residence of H. A. Mears, president of the Mears-Slayton Lumber company, but no sign now remains of the house. Back of this, facing on Ontario street, was the former residence of Congressman Adams, where he lived for many years. In the distance, at the northwest corner of Erie street, is the Sheldon "castle," which is now being torn down. Many fine old residences have been and are being razed, one of the most notable being the old Perry H. Smith residence at the northwest corner of Huron street.

On the opposite side of Huron street were the three residences erected by the late Isaac N. Arnold, a close friend of Abraham Lincoln. At the corner of Chicago avenue is the Kinzie apartment building, at one time the most fashionable apartment building on the north side.

Hardy, Francis H. Hardy, and Archibald L. Young. The most valuable of the holdings are those at the northwest corner of Michigan avenue and Madison street, comprising the leasehold estate in the 87x163 feet at the corner, which is given an indicated value of $867,000, and the fee in the 38x162 feet adjoining on the north, together with the improvements, which is given an indicated consideration of $550,000.

Hardy at an indicated value of $282,000, subject to an incumbrance of $225,000. Another comprises the leasehold estate in the 48x90 feet in Clark street 44 feet north of Monroe street, east front, conveyed by Mr. Hardy, the transfer having only 50 cents' worth of stamps.

Another transfer covered the property at the northeast, southeast, and southwest corners of Delaware place and Seneca street, the first 150x215 feet, with flat improvements, the second 100x109 feet, and the other 231x109 feet, both vacant. Included in this transfer also was property in Indiana avenue north of Twenty-fourth street, 78x170 feet; the northeast corner of Michigan and Twenty-fourth, 60x133 feet, and Wabash avenue 200 feet south of Eighth street, 40x130 feet, all of which were given an indicated value of $696,000.

Wilson Avenue Leasehold.

There was also included the leasehold interest in 100x125 feet in Wilson avenue 42 feet east of Kenmore avenue, of an dicated value of $70,000, also the property at the northeast corner of Wilson and Clifton avenues, 58x155 feet, of an indicated value of $70,000. There were other smaller holdings.

The trustees are directed to issue forthwith certificates for 10,000 shares of the nominal par value of $100, as follows: Francis A. Hardy, 10,500 shares; Mary C. Hardy, 2,000; Edward K. Hardy, 2,500; Francis H. Hardy, 3,000; Editha H. Young, 1,000, in payment for the real estate and leasehold estates conveyed to the trustees.

M. W. Quinn Disposes of $20,000 Woodlawn Tract

Record was made of the transfer by Matthew W. Quinn to Noah Van Cleef of the tract at the northwest corner of Seventy-eighth street and Woodlawn avenue, 130 feet on the north and 598 feet on the east, extending to Seventy-seventh street, for an indicated consideration of $15,000, subject to an incumbrance of $5,000.

Market Street Property Is Sold to St. Ignatius

There was filed for record the transfer by Harriet McDonnell to St. Ignatius college of the property in Market street 20 feet north of Randolph street, lot 40x91 feet, west front, with business improvements, a nominal consideration being given, but there were $27 worth of stamps on the deed. The board of review valuation was $61,000.

Some "Short Line" Roads Fare Ill.

While the railway administration is trying to drive the hardest bargain possible with the 500 or 600 companies whose property the government has taken possession of, it is according still less favorable treatment to "short lines" that have not been taken.

A considerable number of such lines are only systems of switch tracks belonging to industrial companies and they have no real claim to consideration. Many short lines, however, furnish general railway service to small sections of territory and also are terminals and connecting links for larger systems. Their stocks and bonds are widely held by investors and they differ from the great railways in size only.

A policy of "fair treatment" has been announced in general terms, but the owners of short line securities are waiting in fear and trembling to see how it will work out in practice. One road which was not taken, suffered from an immediate diversion of traffic to government lines, reducing its business to such a degree that it went into bankruptcy and the court has ordered most of it "junked." This road is the Colorado Midland. Another road in difficulty is the Denver and Salt Lake. The railway administration informed it that the "statutory basis for determining the road's rental was considered too high by government authorities," and offered to take it over for no compensation. This offer being refused, it was not taken.

The two roads just mentioned have not been prosperous, for some years at least, but they are merely samples. Names could be given of formerly profitable short lines whose business has declined through diversion of traffic to government roads, and which seem to be facing bankruptcy. Others may be faring better. Complete information on this subject is not obtainable for the present, and in the meantime investors in short line securities are hoping for the best. They should do more than hope. They should join with the millions of other investors and make an effort to save their properties.

Canadian Pacific Note Certificates.

C. L. W.: The Canadian Pacific 6 per cent note-certificates are a conservative investment. They are the obligation of the company and are secured by pledge of deferred payments on lands sold. The Canadian Pacific has only $3,650,000 of bonds outstanding and about $11,000,000 of equipment trusts. The $52,000,000 of note certificates rank next and are followed by over $500,000,000 of stock. The notes may be paid at par at any time on sixty day notice. Because of that condition they have never sold far from par and are not traded in actively.

Brief Answers.

H. K., Highland Park: The Automatic Carburetor company has not replied to requests for information. It offered $200,000 of preferred stock in November, 1916, and is said to have paid a quarterly dividend on it in January, 1917. Indications are that the stock is hazardous.

A. L. B.: The Price Merchants syndicate has never replied to requests for information. Some months ago shares were offered at $22. No recent quotation is found.
